PREFACE

The collection of songs edited in the present volume possesses a twofold interest. Composed so long ago as the fourteenth century A.D., it claims the attention not only of the philologist as the oldest known specimen of the Kāshmīrī language, but also, and still more, that of the student of religions.

In ancient times, the religious system based on Śaiva Yōga was the object of much study amongst the learned men of Kashmīr. From that remote corner of North-Western India their teaching influenced the whole peninsula,—so much so that we even read that Rāmânuja, the leader of a rival Vaiṣṇava belief, felt compelled to travel from distant Madras to Kashmīr, with the special object of combating the hostile creed at its fountain head. There is an imposing mass of Kashmīr Śaiva literature still extant. Much of it has been published in the original Sanskrit, and more than one English work has been devoted to it.

Lallā, or Lal Děd, the authoress of the following verses, was a wandering ascetic, and a devoted follower of this cult. The importance of her songs consists in the fact that they are not a systematic exposé of Śaivism on the lines laid down by the theologians who preceded her, but illustrate the religion on its popular side. What we have here is not a mere book-religion as evolved in the minds of great thinkers and idealists, but a picture of the actual hopes and fears of the common folk that nominally followed the teaching of these wise men whom they had accepted as their guides. The book, in short, gives an account, often in vivid and picturesque language, of the actual working out in practice of a religion previously worked out in theory. As such, it is a unique contribution to the body of evidence that must necessarily form the basis of a future history of one of the most important religious systems of India.

A word may be added as to the respective shares of those responsible for the preparation of this edition. While each has considered and has discussed what the other has written, it may be roughly assumed that, while the account of the Yōga system and the many notes referring to it are directly, or indirectly, from the pen of Dr. Barnett, the preparation of the text, its translation, the various appendixes, and the vocabulary are the work of Sir George Grierson.

SYSTEM OF TRANSLITERATION USED

THE system of transliteration is the same as that employed by Sir George Grierson in his Kāshmīrī Dictionary.

The Mātrā-vowels are represented as follows:

क्का $$k^aka$$
, कृषि k^ak^i , कृष् k^ok^u , कृष् k^ik^i ; कि k^i , कृ k^u , कू k^i , कि k^i , कि k^i , कि k^i .

The ordinary vowels are represented as follows:

का ka, का $k\bar{a}$, कि ki, की $k\bar{a}$, कु ku. कू $k\bar{\nu}$, का $k\bar{e}$, के kai, का $k\bar{\nu}$, को $k\bar{\nu}$, की kau, कि aik^i , के कु kok^u , के कु $k\bar{\nu}$, को कु $k\bar{\nu}$, को कु $k\bar{\nu}$, के कु $k\bar{\nu}$, के कु $k\bar{\nu}$.

स्रु is no longer a vowel, and is represented by ru. स्रु is similarly represented by $r\check{e}$. Anun \bar{a} sika is represented by \tilde{a} . Thus \tilde{a} $k\hat{a}$.

The Kāshmīrī consonants are:

Letters enclosed in brackets are found only in borrowed words, and do not belong to the language.

For further particulars Sir George Grierson's Kāshmīrī Dictionary, in course of publication by the Asiatic Society of Bengal, and his Manual of the Kāshmīrī Language. published by the Clarendon Press, may be consulted.

For Sanskrit, the ordinary system of the Royal Asiatic Society is followed.

INTRODUCTION

THE verses in the following collection are attributed to a woman of Kashmir, named, in Sanskrit, Lalla Yogiswari. There are few countries in which so many wise saws and proverbial sayings are current as in Kashmīr, and none of these have greater repute than those attributed by universal consent to Lal Ded, or 'Granny Lal', as she is called nowadays. There is not a Kāshmīrī, Hindū or Musalmān, who has not some of these ready on the tip of his tongue, and who does not reverence her memory.

Little is known about her. All traditions agree that she was a contemporary of Sayyid 'Alī Hamadānī, the famous saint who exercised a great influence in converting Kashmīr to Islām. He arrived in Kashmīr in A.D. 1380, and remained there six years, the reigning sovereign being Qutbu'd-Dīn (A.D. 1377-93).2 As we shall see from her songs, Lallā was a Yōginī, i.e. a follower of the Kashmīr branch of the Śaiva religion, but she was no bigot, and, to her, all religions were at one in their essential elements.3 There is hence no inherent difficulty in accepting the tradition of her association with Sayyid 'Alī. Hindūs, in their admiration for their coreligionist, go, it is true, too far when they assert that he received his inspiration from her, but the Musalmans of the Valley, who naturally deny this, and who consider him to be the great local apostle of their faith, nevertheless look upon her with the utmost respect.4

Numerous stories are current about Lalla in the Valley, but none of them is deserving of literal credence. She is said to have been originally a married woman of respectable family. She was cruelly treated by her mother-in-law, who nearly starved her. The wicked woman tried to persuade Lalla's husband that she was unfaithful to him, but when he followed her to what he believed was an assignation, he found her at prayer. The mother-in-law tried other devices, which were all conquered by Lalla's virtue and patience, but at length she succeeded in getting her turned out of the house.2 Lalla wandered forth in rags and adopted a famous Kāshmīrī Śaiva saint named Sed Bôvu as her Guru or spiritual preceptor. The result of his teaching was that she herself took the status of a mendicant devotee, and wandered about the country singing and dancing in a half-nude condition. remonstrated with for such disregard for decency, she is said to have replied that they only were men who feared God, and that there were very few of such about.3 During this time Sayvid 'Alī Hamadānī arrived in Kashmīr, and one day she saw him in the distance. Crying out 'I have seen a man', she turned and fled. Seeing a baker's shop close by, she leaped into the blazing oven and disappeared, being apparently consumed to ashes. The saint followed her and inquired if any woman had come that way, but the baker's wife, out of fear, denied that she had seen any one. Savvid 'Alī continued

1 Compare the Kāshmīrī saying:-

hondu marān kina kath, Lali nalwütü bali na zāh.

^{&#}x27;Whether they killed a big sheep or a small one, it was all the same; Lal had always a stone for her dinner.' For, when she dined in the presence of other people, the mother-in-law used to put a lumpy stone on her platter and thinly cover it with rice, so that it looked like quite a big heap. Still she never murmured. Cf. K. Pr., p. 82, and Panjab Notes and Queries, ii. 743.

and Fanjab Notes and Queries, 11. 743.

² For these, and other stories, see Panjab Notes and Queries, l.c.

his search, and suddenly Lalla reappeared from the oven clad in the green garments of Paradise.

The above stories will give some idea of the legends that cluster round the name of Lallā. All that we can affirm with some assurance is that she certainly existed, and that she probably lived in the fourteenth century of our era, being a contemporary of Sayyid 'Alī Hamadānī at the time of his visit to Kashmīr. We know from her own verses that she was in the habit of wandering about in a semi-nude state, dancing and singing in ecstatic frenzy as did the Hebrew $n\bar{a}b\bar{i}'s$ of old and the more modern Dervishes.

No authentic manuscript of her compositions has come down to us. Collections made by private individuals have occasionally been put together,² but none is complete, and no two agree in contents or text. While there is thus a complete dearth of ordinary manuscripts, there are, on the other hand, sources from which an approximately correct text can be secured.

The ancient Indian system by which literature is recorded not on paper but on the memory, and carried down from generation to generation of teachers and pupils, is still in complete survival in Kashmir. Such fleshy tables of the heart are often more trustworthy than birch-bark or paper manuscripts. The reciters, even when learned Pandits, take every care to deliver the messages word for word as they have received them, whether they understand them or not. such cases we not infrequently come across words of which the meaning given is purely traditional or is even lost. A typical instance of this has occurred in the experience of Sir George Grierson. In the summer of 1896 Sir Aurel Stein took down in writing from the mouth of a professional story-teller a collection of folk-tales, which he subsequently made over to Sir George for editing and translation. In the course of dictation, the narrator, according to custom, conscientiously reproduced words of which he did not know the sense. They were 'old words', the signification of which had been lost, and which had been passed down to him through generations of ustāds, or teachers. That they were not inventions of the moment, or corruptions of the speaker, is shown by the facts that not only were they recorded simultaneously by a well-known Kāshmīrī Paṇḍit, who was equally ignorant of their meanings, and who accepted them without hesitation on the authority of the reciter, but that, long afterwards, at Sir George's request, Sir Aurel Stein got the man to repeat the passages in which the words occurred. They were repeated by him verbatim, literatim, et punctatim, as they had been recited by him to Sir Aurel fifteen years before.

The present collection of verses was recorded under very similar conditions. In the year 1914 Sir George Grierson asked his friend and former assistant, Mahāmahôpâdhyāya Pandit Mukunda Rāma Śāstrī, to obtain for him a good copy of the Lallā-vākyāni, as these verses of Lallā's are commonly called by Pandits. After much search he was unable to find a satisfactory manuscript. But finally he came into touch with a very old Brāhman named Dharma-dāsa Darwēsh of the village of Gush. Just as the professional story-teller mentioned above recited folk-tales, so he made it his business, for the benefit of the piously disposed, to recite Lalla's songs as he had received them by family tradition (kula-paramparácārakrama). The Mahāmahôpâdhyāya recorded the text from his dictation, and added a commentary, partly in Hindī and partly in Sanskrit, all of which he forwarded to Sir George Grierson. These materials formed the basis of the present It cannot claim to be founded on a collation of various manuscripts, but we can at least say that it is an accurate reproduction of one recension of the songs, as they are current at the present day. As in the case of Sir Aurel Stein's folk-tales, this text contains words and passages which the reciter did not profess to understand. He had every inducement to make the verses intelligible, and any conjectural emendation would at once have been accepted on his authority; but, following the traditions of his calling, he had the honesty to refrain from this, and said simply that this was what he had received, and that he did not know its meaning. Such a record is in some respects more valuable than any written manuscript.

Besides this collection, we have also consulted two manuscripts belonging to the Stein Collection housed in the Oxford Indian Institute. Both were written in the Śāradā character. Of these, one (No. cccxlvi of the catalogue, and referred to as 'Stein A' in the following pages) is but a fragment, the first two leaves and all those after the seventeenth being missing. It is nevertheless of considerable value; for, besides giving the text of the original, it also gives a translation into Sanskrit verse, by a Pandit named Rājānaka Bhāskara, of songs Nos. 7-49. The Kāshmīrī text, if we allow for the customary eccentricities of spelling, presents no variant readings of importance and is in places corrupt. We have, therefore, not taken account of it; but, so far as it is available, we reproduce the Sanskrit translation under each verse of our edition.2

The other manuscript (No. cccxlv-referred to herein as 'Stein B') demands more particular consideration. It contains the Kashmiri text of forty-nine of the songs in the present collection. The spelling is in the usual inconsequent style of all Kāshmīrī manuscripts written before Iśvara-kaula gave a fixed orthography to the language in the concluding decades of the nineteenth century,3 and there are also, as usual, a good many mistakes of the copyist. It is, however, valuable as giving a number of variant readings, and because the scribe has marked the metrical accentuation of most of the verses. by putting the mark mafter each accented word.4 For this reason, and also because it gives a good example of the

² Since the above was written, a complete edition of Rājānaka Bhāskara's translation has been printed in Kashmīr. It covers altogether sixty of Lallā's verses. From this edition, the verses missing in Stein A have been supplied.

Sivara-kaula's spelling is that followed in our printed text.

A Regarding the accentual nature of Lalla's metre, see Appendix III.

spelling of Kāshmīrī before Īśvara-kaula's time, under each verse of our text we reproduce, in the Nāgarī character the corresponding verse, if available, of this manuscript. Except that we have divided the words—a matter which rarely gives rise to any doubt—we print these exactly as they stand in the manuscript with all their mistakes and inconsistencies of spelling.

The order of verses in this manuscript is different from that of Dharma-dāsa's text, and we have therefore, in Appendix IV, given a Concordance, showing the correspondence between the two.

Although there is not much consistency in old Kāshmīrī spelling, the following general remarks may facilitate the reading of the text of Stein B. No attempt is made in it to indicate the existence of $m\bar{a}tr\bar{a}$ -vowels or the consequent epenthetic changes of vowels caused by them.¹ For instance, the word tot^u (तत्) is spelt ततो, and the termination $-w\delta n^u$ (वात्) is spelt ततो. As a rule, long vowels are written in the place of these $m\bar{a}tr\bar{a}$ -vowels, the spelling of the old Prakrit from which Kāshmīrī is derived being thus perpetuated. Thus, we have just seen that u- $m\bar{a}tr\bar{a}$ is represented by \bar{v} . Similarly, i- $m\bar{a}tr\bar{a}$ is represented by \bar{v} . For instance, $t\bar{a}m^i$ (तिम) is spelt तमी, and $t\bar{v}p^itan$ (तोषितन) is spelt तापीतन. Again, \bar{u} - $m\bar{a}tr\bar{a}$ is represented by \bar{v} , as in $tr\bar{v}v^{\bar{u}}$ (तोष्

Kāshmīrī possesses a series of affricatives च ta, क tha, and ज za. In Īśvara-kaula's system these are indicated, as shown here, by dots put under the corresponding palatal letters. In Stein B, on the contrary, they are indicated by the palatals without any distinguishing mark—thus च, इ, ज. The true palatals are then distinguished by adding to each the letter ya. Thus—च ca, হা cha, and च ja.

It is a universal rule in Kāshmīrī that every final surd consonant is aspirated. Thus, $r\bar{a}t$, night, is pronounced $r\bar{a}th$,

In our printed text in the Roman character, these are indicated by small letters above the line. Isvara-kaula indicates them with the help of the sign for virāma. Thus, , , , , , .

and in Iśvara-kaula's spelling is written TIU. Before his time it was not customary to indicate this aspiration in writing, and accordingly Stein B spells this word as TIT, and so on in other cases.

Lallā's songs were composed in an old form of the Kāshmīrī language,¹ but it is not probable that we have them in the exact form in which she uttered them. The fact that they have been transmitted by word of mouth prohibits such a supposition. As the language changed insensibly from generation to generation, so must the outward form of the verses have changed in recitation. But, nevertheless, respect for the authoress and the metrical form of the songs have preserved a great many archaic forms of expression.²

As already said, Lallā was a devout follower of the Kashmīr school of Yōga Śaivism. Very little is yet known in Europe concerning the tenets of this form of Hinduism, and we have therefore done our best to explain the many allusions by notes appended to each verse. In addition to these, the following general account of the tenets of this religion has been prepared by Dr. Barnett, which will, we hope, throw light on what is a somewhat obscure subject.

² This matter of Lalla's language is considered at length in Appendix II.

¹ Kāshmīrī, as a distinct language, is much older than Lallā's time. A still more ancient form is preserved by Kalhaņa (twelfth century A.D.) in Rājataraṅgiṇī, v. 398. See Stein's note to his translation of the passage.

PRELIMINARY NOTE ON YOGA

I.

- 1. The object of the discipline called Yōga is to emancipate the individual soul (puruṣa) from its bondage to the material universe (prakṛti). In the term prakṛti is included the mental organism, commonly styled in the Yōga-sūtra citta. The emancipation is effected by a mental and bodily discipline culminating in a spiritual transformation, in which there comes into existence a permanent intuition revealing the essential distinction (vivēka) between puruṣa and prakṛti. This is the state of kaivalya, isolation, which is salvation.
- 2. The citta has five intellectual functions, rrttis. are: (1) pramāna, right judgement of real things; (2) viparyaya, false judgement of real things; (3) vikalpa, imagination without corresponding reality, based on mere words; (4) nidrā, 'sleep', i.e. the negative action that occurs in sleep, based on no conception of reality; (5) smrti, memory, continuance of connexion with an object that has been perceived. also five moral functions, the klėsas, or 'afflictions', viz. (1) avidyā, primal ignorance, by which purusa imagines itself to be identical with the material citta; (2) asmitā, the conception of an 'I am', egoism identifying the powers of purusa and matter; (3) rāga, material desire; (4) dvēsa, hate; (5) abhinirēśa, clinging to embodied life. The k/ēśas move the subject of thought constantly to works, karma, from which arise samskāras and vāsanās, mental predispositions moving him to corresponding future works; and so the vicious cycle goes on in birth after birth for ever, until salvation can be found. To gain salvation the Yogī attempts to paralyse the five vrttis of citta and wear down the klēśas by the various ascetic exercises included under the term astanga, 'eight members'. These are: (1) yama, moral discipline in relation to others; (2) niyama, moral discipline in relation to oneself; (3) asana, suitable modes of sitting during meditation; (4) pránáyāma, regulation of breathing; (5) pratyāhāra, retracting the sense-organs from objects of sense; (6) dhāranā, negative fixation of citta by pinning it to an object; (7) dhyāna, meditation, positive fixation of citta; (8) samādhi, perfect stillness of thought, in which all sense of individuality is extinguished. In the course of these the Yogī is supposed to win various miraculous powers (vibhūti), in addition to the 'light of intuition', prajñáloka. The last three angas collectively make the stage of training called sainyama, and culminate in the condition styled sabīja samādhi, 'the stillness of spirit with the seed', namely, the seed of future activity of citta and consequent karma; or what is nearly the same thing, samprajñāta samādhi, stillness of spirit in which, however, the rttis of citta are not yet paralysed. To attain the final stage, this kind of samādhi has to be converted into nirbīja, 'seedless', or asamprajñāta 'unconscious', samādhi. This takes place in three phases, called nirodha-parinama, samadhi-parinama, and ēkāgratā-pariņāma. In the first of these the activity of the waking state of citta is arrested, and its rettis are temporarily paralysed; in the second, the power of citta to relate itself to manifold objects is destroyed, and its cognitions are restricted to a single object of inward or outward perception; in the third, the two previous conditions are combined in equal proportion. These are permanent transformations, as a result of which all sense of objectivity disappears from the matter of thought, leaving only the intuition of the distinction between purusa and prakrti, wherein the purusa shines for ever in its perfectly pure still radiance.

II.

3. From the first the method of gnosis which we have outlined presupposed certain mystic conceptions of the natural and spiritual world. These in course of time have become more and more important in the Yōgic systems, and have tended to obscure the philosophical and ethical elements in the primitive Yoga. They may be classified broadly under two heads: (1) the theory of Nature and of salvation by means thereof; (2) the practice of physical means supposed to be We shall now efficacious in attaining the latter object. endeavour to give a general outline of the Yogic theory of nature in its developed form, noting in advance that it represents only one of the various aspects which have been assumed by Yoga, though perhaps the most important aspect. Our exposition is based upon the following works: Sivasainhita, an anonymous work of some antiquity (quoted as SS.); Ṣaṭ-cakra-nirūpana, by Pūrnananda (quoted as SCN.); and Hatha-yōga-pradīpikā, by Svatmarāma (quoted as HYP., in the German translation by H. Walter, Munich, 1893). The references to SS. are according to the text as published in Sacred Books of the Hindus, Allahabad, 1914.

- 4. In Yōgic theory the human body is conceived as a miniature copy or replica of the world without it; the forces by which this microcosm is controlled at the same time operate upon the macrocosm outside, and thus by certain physical and mental processes the Yōgī can win for himself not only supernatural powers over his own body and mind but also a miraculous control over the universe, culminating in the complete translation of his soul into the highest phase of Being, the Absolute (usually conceived as Supreme Siva) for ever and ever.
- 5. In the human body the vertebral column is conceived as Mount Mēru, the central mountain of Hindū cosmology. As the macrocosmic sun and moon are imagined to turn round Mēru, so we have a microcosmic sun and moon in the human body: the moon at the top of the vertebral column and the sun at its base (SS. II. 6-12). Among the numerous nāḍīs (veins or arteries: see HYP. p. iv) there are three of supreme importance, Suṣumnā, Iḍā, and Pingalā, which descend from the brain into the pit of the abdomen; and HYP. (p. iii, and text III. 113) says that between the pudendum and navel is a 'bulb' (kanda), into which the nāḍīs debouch. Suṣumnā is identified with Agni, fire. At the upper end of Iḍā is the moon, and they are identified; at the lower end of Pingalā is the sun, and they too are identified (SS. II. 13-20). These three $n\bar{a}d\bar{\beta}s$ are in immediate conjunction, Idā being on the left hand of Suṣumnā, and Pingalā on the right. Suṣumnā rises vertically from the pelvic region along the vertebral column as far as the Brahma-randhra (on which see below); there it bends round to the right of the Ajñā circle (see below, § 18) and passes up into the left nostril. In the centre of Suṣumnā is a $n\bar{a}d\bar{\beta}$ called $Citr\bar{a}$, which is said to be of five colours, and to be the upddhi of the body, and to have the Brahma-randhra at its upper end (SS. II. 18-19, V. 124). The Brahma-randhra is the upper extremity of Suṣumnā, and of the inner $n\bar{a}d\bar{\beta}$ enclosed in Susumnā.

- 6. SCN. refines somewhat upon this theory by asserting that inside Suṣumnā there is a bright $n\bar{a}d\bar{\imath}$ called Vajrā, and that inside Vajrā is another $n\bar{a}d\bar{\imath}$ called Citrinī, which passes through all the six circles attached to the spine, to which we shall come presently (§§ 9 ff.). In the centre of Citrinī is the Brahma-nādī, a subtile duct representing pure knowledge and bliss. At the lower mouth of Suṣumnā is the Brahma-dvāra, or 'Door of Brahma', where are the 'knots' (granthi: see HYP. p. xvii¹). Cf. also HYP. pp. v, vii.
- 7. Sometimes, to continue the analogy of microcosm to macrocosm, Idā is identified with the Ganges, Pingalā with the Jamnā, and Suṣumnā with the Saraswatī, and the point where they meet, at the mouth of the Brahma-randhra, is called Trivēṇā (Tribeni, the meeting place of the Huglī or Ganges, Jamnā, and Saraswatī, in Hooghly District); by daily spiritual contemplation of this union, corresponding to the physical act of bathing at the real Tribeni, the Yōgī may win salvation for his ancestors and himself (SS. V. 103 ff., 130 ff.). Sometimes the sacred city of Benares (Vārāṇasī) is localized in the microcosm by styling Idā Vāraṇā and Pingalā Asī, so that their place of union at the Brahma-randhra is Vārāṇasī, the residence of Viśvanātha, the Lord of the Universe (SS. V. 100-1).

¹ Some writers speak of three knots: the Brahma-granthi in the Anāhata-circle, the Viṣṇu-granthi in the Viśuddha, and the Rudra-granthi in the Ājňā.

- 8. The microcosmic moon at the top of the vertebral column, which is said to consist of eight and sometimes of sixteen digits, is always exuding nectar, which flows downwards. Half of this nectar passes through Ida, on the left side, and there becomes water for the nourishment of the body. The other half goes through Suṣumnā into the vertebral column, and thence down to the base of the latter, where it meets the microcosmic sun. This sun, which has twelve digits, casts its rays upwards through Pingalā along the right side of the body, and thence through the system (SS. II, 6-12, V. 145).
- 9. In the abdomen, in the middle of the sphere of the sun, is the Vaiśvānara fire, which effects the process of digestion in the body (SS. II. 32-34). In the same region is situated the first of the cakras or circles, which are conceived as being of the form of lotuses, attached at intervals to Susumnā (cf. HYP. p. xiv). The first circle is the Mūládhāra, or simply $\bar{A}dh\bar{a}ra$, and is imagined to be a lotus of four digits in width, situated two digits above the anus and two digits below the penis. In the pericarp of this lotus is a triangular space representing the youi or female organ. On this space dwells the Kula-Kundalini (or simply Kundalini), who is the Śakti or Cic-chakti, the power of spirit, the creative force of the phenomenal universe (cf. HYP. p. xiii). She is golden of hue, like a streak of lightning; when at rest, she sleeps rolled up in three and a half coils, like a serpent, with her tail in her mouth, inside the lower orifice of Susumnā. On her left is Idā, which coils round Susumnā and finally enters the right nostril; on her right is Pingala, proceeding in the reverse way upwards and debouching into the left nostril (SS. II. 21-31, V. 56 ff., 124). SCN. 5 ff. adds to these details the information that Mūlâdhāra represents earth, and is the seat of Brahma, and it locates the yoni (which is called Traipura; cf. below, § 21) at the mouth of Vajrā (§ 6).
- 10. Kuṇḍalinī is sometimes termed $V\bar{a}g$ - $d\bar{e}v\bar{\imath}$ or Goddess of Speech, the $\acute{S}akti$ of Viṣṇu, the mother of the three Guṇas, the Seed of Being $(b\bar{\imath}ja)$. Over her sleeping form broods the $K\bar{a}ma$ - $b\bar{\imath}ja$ or 'seed of Love', a bright spiritual radiance endowed with the powers of knowledge and action, which circulates through the body. This Kāma-bīja is also styled Svayambhu-linga, the phallic symbol of the Self-created Being Siva (SS. V. 57-62).

- 11. SCN. 9-12 has a very similar account: it adds that around the yōni there blows a red wind called Kandarpa (the same as Kāma, Love); in the yōni is the Svayambhū-linga, having the hue of molten gold, and facing downwards; above this is Kundalinī, who is like a lotus-fibre and lightning, and covers with her face the orifice of Susumnā. It also states that in the midst of Kundalinī is Paramā Kalā or Paramēśvarī, or Mahāprakṛti, the super-subtile principle of Bliss which is like lightning, and illuminates the universe (SCN. 13).
- 12. The $y\bar{o}ni$ and the linga upon it are known as the Kula or Home, the site of the Power of Phenomenal Being: we shall return to this anon (\S 19).
- 13. A little distance above Mūladhāra, at the base of the penis, is the second circle, Srādhiṣṭhāna, conceived as a red lotus with six petals (SS. V. 75 ff.). It represents Varuṇa, and is the seat of Visnu (SCN. 15 ff.).
- 14. The third circle is $Manip\bar{n}ra$, a golden lotus of ten petals by the navel (SS. V. 79 ff.). SCN. holds that it is blue, and that it represents Agni, and that Rudra dwells on the inverted triangle $(y\bar{v}ni)$ at its centre (SCN. 20 ff.).
- 15. The fourth circle is Anāhata, a red lotus of twelve petals situate in the heart; in it is a flame styled Bāṇa-linga (SS. V. 83 ff.). It represents Vāyu or Wind; in the double triangle within it dwells Īśāna; in the middle of this double triangle is a yōni or triangle known as Trikōṇā Śakti, within which is the golden Bāṇa-linga, on the head of which is a lotus of eight petals, the seat of Lakṣmī (SCN. 23 ff.).
- 16. In this lotus dwells the Práṇa or breath of life, together with the rāsanās or influences of former works upon the soul, the karma thereof, and its ahamkāra or principle of egoity (SS. III. 1-8).

¹ Besides Prana or outward breath Yōga recognizes also Apana, breath going downwards in the anus; Samāna, in the navel; Udāna in the throat; Vyāna, circulating through the body, besides some others: SS. III. 1-8, Ghēraṇḍa-samhitā, V. 60 ff. &c.

- 17. Above Anāhata, and situate in the throat, is the circle Viśuddha, a golden lotus of sixteen petals (SS. V. 90 ff.). SCN. adds that it represents Ākāśa or ether, and is the residence of Sadāśiva, and ascribes to it the colour of smoke (SCN. 29 ff.).
- 18. The sixth circle is $\bar{A}j\bar{n}\bar{a}$, a lotus of two petals between the eyebrows, which contains the mystic force called $ak\bar{s}ara-b\bar{v}ja$ (SS. V. 96 ff., 145 ff.). It is of the colour of the moon. In its pericarp is the seat of Siva called Itara, in the form of a linga, like a series of lightnings; it is parama-kula-pada, the highest stage of the Kula, in which Siva and his consort Sakti are half and half, $ardhang\bar{v}$, in mutual fusion. In it is envisaged Paramâtman, the Supreme Self, as creator of origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the cosmos, like a halo of the light of fire, sun, and moon. After death the Yōgī who has fixed his breaths on this seat of Viṣṇu enters here into Param Brahma (SCN. 34-40).
- 19. Above all these circles is the highest of all, Sahasrára, conceived as a lotus with a thousand petals, situated at the base of the palate. On its pericarp is a reversed triangular space or yōni, in the centre of which is the Brahma-randhra or upper extremity of Suṣumnā. On this yōni (or below it, according to SS. V. 145) is the Moon, whose nectar flows downwards through the system (SS. V. 103 ff., 122 ff.); its place is within the sinus of the forehead (SS. V. 148). Sahasrâra is conceived as Mount Kailāsa, the home of Śiva; and as representing the sphere of the Absolute or Transcendental Being, Parama-Śiva or Paramêśvara, as opposed to the sphere of cosmic action or Kula, it is styled A-kula or Na-kula. It is thus the physical as well as the spiritual antithesis of the Kula at the lower end of Suṣumnā (SS. V. 151 ff.).
- 20. As usual, SCN. refines on this. It describes Sahasrâra as having a thousand red petals facing downwards, and containing fifty letters of the alphabet from a to $k \cdot a$. It contains the full moon without the hare (our 'man in the moon'), and in its central $y \bar{o} n i$ the Y $\bar{o} g \bar{i}$ should contemplate the Void (SCN. 42 ff.). In the void of this $y \bar{o} n i$ is the sixteenth digit of the Moon; it is called $Am\bar{a}$ or $An\bar{a}$; it is like lightning, and is thin as one-hundredth part of a lotus-fibre; it conveys the nectar flowing from Sahasrara. Inside Amā is the digit Nirvāṇa, which is fine as a thousandth part of a hair, curved like the new moon, bright as twelve suns, the tutelary deity (adhidaivata) of living creatures. In the middle of Nirvāṇa is Apūrva-nirvāṇa-śakti, which is thin as the ten-millionth part of a hair and bright as ten million suns, the creator of the threefold world and dispenser of the knowledge of Brahma, the life of all creatures. Inside this Apūrva-nirvāṇa is the Śiva-pada or seat of Siva, or Param Brahma, also called Hamsa-sthāna, the Swan's Home, the revelation of salvation and state of eternal bliss (SCN. 48-51).

21. As the object of metaphysical contemplation is to merge the individual soul into the absolute All-Spirit, so the object of Yogic contemplation is to absorb the Kundalini in the microcosm, representing the macrocosmic Energy, into Sahasrâra, typifying the Absolute, whereby the Cosmos is merged into the infinite bliss of Paramésvara. In order to effect this transit of Kundalinī through Susumnā and the Brahma-randhra into Sahasrara, the nadis must, by the exercise of pranayama, be blocked up with air introduced into them by inspiration (pūraka) and retained in them (kumbhaka); the normal circulation of the air through the system, which causes the continuance of the soul's imprisonment in the body, is arrested by this stoppage of the air. Then Kundalini, when she has been aroused to sufficient energy by mystic exercises, passes up through Susumnā, bursting the eight knots (§ 6) that bind the nadis, and enters through the Brahma-randhra into Sahasrâra, the realm of the Absolute (SS. V. 127 ff.). long training is needed before Kundalinī can be stimulated to this supreme effort. An earlier stage of the training is passed in Muladhara. The Yogi after taking a deep inspiration fixes his thought upon the lotus of Mūladhara and compresses the yōni in it, meditating upon Kāma, the Spirit of Love, who dwells in the yoni, and conceiving in the flame above it a union as Siva and Sakti. Then Kundalini, styled Tripura as comprising the three principles fire, sun, and moon, begins to rise in Suṣumnā, and after drinking the nectar streaming down it returns to the Kula (SS. IV. 1-5, V. 61 ff.). Mudrās, or various postures of the body, are practised in order to increase mechanically the activity of Kuṇḍalinī. These methods, with further contemplation of the higher circles up to Ājñā, stimulate Kuṇḍalinī to such a degree that in the last stage the Yōgī is able to bring her up into Sahasrâra. By long practice his citta-vṛttis (activities of the material organ of thought) become absorbed in the Akula, the Absolute; his samādhi becomes one of perfect stillness. Drinking the lunar nectar of Sahasrâra, he overcomes Death (cosmic, conditioned being) and the Kula (SS. V. 151 ff.).

- 22. SCN. 52 instructs the Yōgī, after due practice of the yamas and niyamas (above, § 2) and spiritual purification, to stimulate Kuṇḍalinī to burst the Svayambhū-linga, and to bring her with the sound of the mystic syllable hum to the Brahma-dvāra (§ 6), in the centre of Mūlâdhāra. She then bursts the lingas in Anāhata and Ājñā, and at the Brahmarandhra unites with Parama-Siva, shining like a bright thread of lightning. The Yōgī should bring her together with his soul (jīvālman) into Sahasrāra, and there contemplate her as supreme and as Caitanya, spirit. When she has there drunk the red nectar from Siva, she returns to Mūlâdhāra by the way whereby she came. Then he should make a libation of this nectar to the deities of the cosmos, whereby he obtains immunity from future birth and assurance of absorption into the Infinite.
- 23. Yōgic writers often dwell upon the phenomena of the Nāda. Of the cosmological significance of this term we shall speak below (§ 24); here we need only notice its physical aspect, in which it signifies the mystic sound, or anāhata-dhvani, heard by the Yōgī in the Suṣumnā in the interior of his body. Several varieties of this Nāda are mentioned in HYP. IV. 69 ff. The first of them is the sound caused in the ether of the heart when the exercise of prānāyāma (§ 2) has loosened the brahma-granthi or knot of Brahma in the Anāhata circle. Sometimes the sound is identified with the mystic syllable Ōū.

Probably the idea was suggested by the noise heard on closing the ears with the hands, to which HYP. IV. 82 refers.

24. Yogic works, in common with the Tantras, often refer to a theory of cosmogony of which the leading idea is as follows. The Purusa, Absolute Spirit, Para Siva, or Brahma, and the Prakrti, identified with the Supreme Sakti, are eternally coexistent. Like Purusa, Prakrti is to be conceived as both unqualified and qualified; through Her universal presence as the principle of cosmic Bliss, Purusa reveals Himself in all finite being. Essentially they are two in one and one in two. Creation begins when from Him as affected by Her. i.e. as niskala, there issues the primal Bindu or 'drop' (the dot representing the final nasal sound at the end of the mystic syllable Om). The same idea is sometimes expressed more fully by the statement that Prakrti by contact with Purusa becomes spiritualized ($cin-matr\bar{a}$), and in an effort towards creation She becomes solidified and changes into the primal Bindu. In the latter Siva and Sakti exist together in an as yet undissolved union, shrouded in the bonds of Mava. bearing the potentialities of cosmic creation, continuance, and dissolution. It is imagined as existing in the form of a grain of gram or pulse in the Sahasrâra of the microcosm (see above, § 19), where it composes the Void (§ 20) or Brahmapada there. This primal Bindu—under the influence of Time, according to some—divides itself into three, a gross or seminal Bindu, the germ of the material universe, a subtle Bindu which contains the gunas or modes of matter (the well-known Sattwa, Rajas, and Tamas), which is termed Nada. and a supreme Bindu. Nada literally means 'sound', and denotes or is denoted by the semicircle under the bindu or dot on the syllable Öm (). From the Bindu as it thus divides itself arises an inarticulate sound styled Sabda-Brahman, 'Speech-Brahman', from which emerge, according to some, the three cosmic Powers of Knowledge, Will, and Action: others derive from it the genesis of the material principle of the finite universe, Mahat or Buddhi, and its evolutes. The theories of cosmic evolution that are connected with all this are extremely complicated and obscure, and hardly repay study. But it may be well to call attention to the similar theory of the Śaiva Siddhânta, one school of which teaches that from Pure Māyā emanates Nāda (Vāk), the elemental sound or Logos, and from Nāda the Bindu or cosmic germ, from which are successively evolved the principles of the finite universe; in this theory Śiva includes the Trinity consisting of Pati, Paśu, and Pāśa, or 'Lord', 'Herd', and 'Bond', i.e. Supreme Being, souls bound in the fetters of finitude, and the three forces binding them, which are $Māy\bar{a}$, $\bar{A}nara$ or $Avidy\bar{a}$, the power of darkness obscuring the native light of the soul, and Karma, the mechanical influence of former works upon present experience. Pure Māyā is almost the same conception as that of Śakti as explained above.

25. So far we have dealt with Nada and Bindu in their general macrocosmical aspects, but they also play a prominent rôle in the microcosm of the individual. The following account is taken from the Śiva-sūtra-vimarśinī of Ksēmarāja. We have seen (§ 9) that Kundalini, or Śakti, resides within the Mūlâdhāra, ordinarily sleeping rolled up in coils like a This serpent-like Kundalinī surrounds the microcosmic Supreme, who is in the shape of a minute dot of light. The first stage towards enlightenment occurs when a man obtains glimpses of this dot of light. By this the dot is set in motion, and rouses the Kundalinī, or Sakti, from her sleep. She wakes with a great sound (nāda) and becomes conscious. The soul is thus illuminated by a flash of the supreme light of consciousness. The Sakti, being merely the immanent aspect of the Supreme, is identical with Him. It is this flash of light, or bindu, and this sound of Sakti, or nāda, that are mystically represented by the nāda-bindu of the syllable ōm, written 刻", with anunāsika ("), of which the dot represents the bindu, and the semicircle the nāda. By a further extension of the metaphor, this nāda-bindu is thus considered to be a representation of the Ultimate Supreme.

26. Inasmuch as the divine Sakti reveals herself in sound,

¹ A translation of this work by P. T. Shrinivas Iyengar has been published in the Indian Thought Series, Allahabad, 1912.

Word or Logos, the elements of speech, namely the syllables and their combinations, have a profound mystic significance in Saiva doctrine. Hence there has arisen a copious literature on the mysteries of the letters of the alphabet and their groupings in spells (mantras), of which some idea may be gathered from the paper 'On the Sāradā Alphabet' in Journ. Royal Asiatic Society, October, 1916.

27. Appendix. In the preface to the translation of SS. in the Sacred Books of the Hindus it is suggested that the cakras and other terms of Yōgic anatomy correspond more or less to real parts of the human body, and the following identifications are proposed:—

Citrā: the grey matter of the spinal cord.

Brahma-randhra: the central canal of the spinal cord (but by modern Hindus identified with the anterior fontanelle).

Mūlādhāra: the sacral plexus.

Maṇipūra: the epigastric plexus.

Anāhata: the cardiac plexus.

Viśuddha: the laryngeal or pharyngeal plexus.

 $\bar{A}j\tilde{n}a$: the cavernous plexus.

Sahasrára: the medulla oblongata.

Susumnā: the spinal cord.

Pingalā: the right sympathetic cord.

1. When by repeated practice (of $y\bar{o}ga$) the whole expanse (of the visible universe) hath ascended to absorption;

When the qualified (universe) hath become merged within the Ether;

When the ethereal Void itself hath become dissolved, then naught but the Weal hath remained.

The true doctrine, O Brāhmaṇa, is but this alone.

2. There is there no word or (thought of) mind. There is there no non-transcendent or transcendent.

Not by vow of silence, not by mystic attitudes, is there entry there.

Not there dwell Siva and his Sakti.

If there remaineth somewhat, that is what the doctrine teacheth.

1. The universe is here called 'that which has wide expanse', i.e. the wide expanse of creation. In the consciousness of the devotee who has attained to enlightenment it is recognized as being really an illusive emanation from the Supreme, and this recognition causes, to the consciousness of the devotee, its reabsorption in Him. Before the absorption of the universe, it has qualities.

Gagan, the sky, means the wide expanse of empty space, and, hence, the principle of $\bar{a}k\bar{a}sa$, ethereality, or of vacuity, with which it is identified in the third line. Trath is the splash of water upon water, and, just as water falling with a splash into water is utterly united with that into which it falls, so the perception of the visible world is, as it were, at one splash, lost in and becomes one with the Void. This Void is not the ultimate Supreme, but is the first stage in His apparent evolution, in which he associates Himself with $M\bar{a}y\bar{a}$, or cosmic illusion, and thereby becomes subjected to limited individual experience. For further particulars, see the Note on Yōga, § 24 and Vocabulary, s. v. shūñ.

Transcending this stage, the soul loses all consciousness of limited individuality, and becomes absorbed in the Supreme as unlimited pure consciousness and nothing else. This it is that is the aim of the devotee.

2. 'There', i.e. in the Supreme. The $k \delta l$, or family (Sanskrit kula), is the group consisting of the $j\bar{\imath}va$ (individual soul), prakrti (primal matter), space, time, ether, earth, water, fire, and air. The $ak\bar{\imath}l$ is that which transcends these. Hence, $k\bar{\imath}l-ak\bar{\imath}l$ means the totality of all creation, or the visible creation and that which transcends it. For the transcendental meaning of these words, see Note on Yōga, §§ 12, 19.

Vows of silence and the like do not lead directly to Him. The utmost they can do is to lead the mind to that knowledge of the Supreme which brings it into union with Him.

The 'somewhat', i.e. the ineffable Supreme, is not even Siva and his Sakti, or energic power, for these have form and name, while the Supreme has neither.

3. With passionate longing did I, Lallā, go forth.

Seeking and searching did I pass the day and night.

Then, lo, saw I in mine own house a learned man,

And that was my lucky star and my lucky moment when I laid hold of him.

4. Slowly, slowly, did I stop my breath in the bellows-pipe (of my throat).

Thereby did the lamp (of knowledge) blaze up within me, and then was my true nature revealed unto me.

I winnowed forth abroad my inner light,

So that, in the darkness itself, I could seize (the truth) and hold it tight.

In these two verses Lalla relates her own spiritual experiences.

3. She had wandered fruitlessly far and wide in search of the truth. In other words, she had made pilgrimages to holy places, and sought for salvation through formal rites, but all in vain. Then suddenly she found it in her own home, i.e. in her own soul. There she found her own Self, which became to her the equivalent of a guru, or spiritual preceptor, and she learned that it and the Supreme Self were one.

4. Suppression of breath is one of the most necessary yōga exercises. See Note on Yōga, § 21, and Vocabulary s. vv. nāḍi and prān, 2. Lallā compares the air-passages to the pipe of a bellows, by gently compressing which the feeble light of a lamp is allowed to blaze up. Otherwise it would be blown out.

It was the light, not the lamp, which she winnowed forth abroad. That is to say, the light which had at first burnt dimly in the inmost recesses of her soul, now suffused her whole being.

He who hath deemed the day (of joy) and the night (of sorrow) to be alike, Duality is the considering God and nature to be distinct. The true believer, who 'sees God', is one who recognizes that God is all in all, and that all creation, and all experiences, are but modes of Him. For the curious expression sura-guru-nāth for 'the Supreme', see Vocab. s. v. guru.

They who have gained experience of the Knowledge-light,—of that Self which is compact of pure spirit and of bliss,

They, while yet alive, have gained release (from earthly births).

But, to the tangled net of continual rebirth, Have ignorant fools added knot by knot in hundreds.

Parama Siva, the Supreme Self, has two aspects, as the Siva-tattwa and the Sakti-tattwa. The former is pure Spirit, the pure light of Intelligence, without anything to shine upon. The latter is perfect Bliss, the supremest Self-satisfaction, absolute Rest. The ideas of pure Spirit and Bliss therefore comprise the whole idea of the Supreme Deity. The object of the devotee is to gain a perfect knowledge of Him, and to recognize that He is the Absolute Self of all things. The 'ignorant fools' are those who have not acquired this knowledge, and who are therefore born and reborn again. See Kashmir Shaivism, pp. 62, 64.

7. Lord, I have not known myself or other than myself.

Continually have I mortified this vile body.

That Thou art I, that I am Thou, that these are joined in one I knew not.

It is doubt to say, 'Who am I?' and 'Who art Thou?'

Or, if we adopt the alternative readings:—

Lord, I have not recognized myself (as one with Thee).

Continually have I shown affection for this single body.

That Thou art I, &c., as above.

An impassioned declaration of the oneness of the Self with the Supreme Self. Lallā declares that in her ignorance she has not known the true relation of herself to others. In other words, she has clung to the conception of her personal identity, and been ignorant of the real nature of her Self, as only one manifestation of the Supreme. She has worn her body out by attempting to gain salvation by good works, not recognizing that these lead only to further transmigrations and are all in vain. The only hope of salvation is the recognition of the identity of her Self with the Supreme. To wonder who I am, and who He is, i.e. to doubt this identity, is indeed the fatal doubt of doubts.

In the alternative text, the meaning is much the same, though couched in somewhat different language.

By whatever name the worshipper may call the Supreme, He is still the Supreme, and He alone can give release. Kēśava means Viṣṇu; by the name of 'Jina' is indicated both a 'Jina', the Saviour of the Jains, and also the Buddha. I suspect that here it is confused with the Arabia Jinn, the 'genius' of the Arabian nights. The Lotus-born Lord is Brahmā.

Or, if we take the variant reading, the last line would run:—

Then whither did earth, ether, and sky go off (absorbed) together (in vacuity)?

Regarding this verse, see Vocab. s.v. sōm. The moon and the sun represent, respectively, the uppermost and lowest seats of action, or cakras. When, by intense mental absorption, or yōga, these disappear, or cease to be present to consciousness, the devotee is conscious of the existence of nothing except his thinking faculty or mind. When this is finally absorbed in the Supreme. all sense of difference between the individual spirit and the Universal Being is sunk in the all-consuming consciousness of All-Being, All-Light. The last line has been corrected in the MS., and this is what seems to be intended. But the reading is unintelligible, and very doubtful. A better reading will be found in verse 77.]

Arise, O Lady, set out to make thine offering, Bearing in thy hand wine, flesh, and cates.

If thou know the syllable that is itself the Supreme Place,

Thou (wilt also know that) if thou violate the custom it is all the same. What loss is there therein?

The lady is a diligent worshipper of Siva, with all the necessary rites, and is apparently a follower of the left-handed sect, that consumes wine and flesh, and performs less reputable acts as a part of worship, which are not consonant with regular Hindū ācāra, or custom.

Lallā points out that the violation of her Hindū custom, by the performance of these Kaula sacraments, is unobjectionable, or, indeed, praiseworthy, provided she knows the mystic syllable $\bar{o}\dot{m}$, regarding which, see verse 15. The 'lady' is probably the Sakti abiding in the speaker's own body; see Note on Yōga, § 9. Cf. verse 77.

Holy books will disappear, and then only the mystic formula will remain.

When the mystic formula departed, naught but mind was left.

When the mind disappeared naught was left anywhere,

And a void became merged within the Void.

In its general lines, this closely agrees with verse 9. The void is the apparent material world, which is really empty nothingness, and, when final release is attained, its apparent existence disappears in the Great Transcendental Void, regarding which, see Note on Yōga, § 24, verse 1, and the Vocabulary s. v. $sh\bar{u}\bar{n}$. Lallā is fond of the expression in the last line, and repeats it in verses 30 and 69.

God of the dark blue throat! As Thou hast the six, so the same six have I.

And yet, estranged from Thee, into misery have I fallen.

Only this discord was there, that, though betwixt Thee and me there was no difference,

Thou wast the Lord of six, while I by six was led astray.

Siva is said to have a dark blue throat from the legend of the churning by which the gods extracted immortality-giving nectar from the ocean. The first to come up in the churning was the deadly Kālakūṭa poison, which was swallowed by Siva to prevent its doing any further harm. The poison dyed his neck dark blue.

Hindū philosophy has numerous groups of six. The Supreme Deity has six attributes, viz. omniscience, contentment, knowledge of the past from eternity, absolute self-sufficiency, irreducible potency, and omnipotence. Lallā exclaims that, though she knew it not, she, as really one with Him, also had these six. But, in her ignorance, while the Supreme was ever master of these six, she was misled by another six. This other six is capable of various interpretations. They may be the six 'enemies', viz. sexual desire, wrath, desire, arrogance, delusion, and jealousy; or they may be the six human infirmities, or the six periods of human life, or the six changes in life, for all of which see the Vocabulary, s. v. shēh.

14. Śiva is the horse. Zealously employed upon the saddle is Viṣṇu, and, upon the stirrup, Brahmā.

The Yogī, by the art of his yoga, will recognize who is the god that will mount upon him as the rider.

15. The ever-unobstructed sound, the principle of absolute vacuity, whose abode is the Void,

Which hath no name, nor colour, nor lineage, nor form,

Which they declare to be (successively transformed into) the Sound and the Dot by its own reflection on itself,—

That alone is the god that will mount upon him.

Siva here is not, like Visnu and Brahmā, the personal deity. He is the 'Siva-tattva', the first phase of the Supreme in the universe. The Yogī understands that this is but a manifestation of a deeper Reality of the Absolute Spirit. He is, as it were, but the horse upon which the Supreme rides. The Supreme is described under various mystical names in verse 15. He is the unobstructed sound,—the sacred syllable ōin,—which, once uttered, vibrates in perpetuity (see Vocabulary, s.v. anahath). His essence is the kha, or sky, i.e. ethereality (cf. verse 1), whose home is in the Void conceived to exist in the Sahasrara in the sinus of the forehead of the microcosm (cf. again verse 1, and also note on Yoga, §§ 20, 24); nothing whatever can be predicated concerning Him. The 'Sound and the Dot' refer to the theory regarding the first stage of enlightenment. The Supreme resides in a man's subtile body in the form of a minute dot of light, surrounded by coils of His Para Śakti, or the Supreme Energy. When by yoga, or intense abstract meditation on the Ego, the man gets his first glimpse of this dot, the latter is set in motion, and the Para Sakti is roused, and awakes with a loud cry. For further particulars, see note on Yoga, §§ 23, 24, 25.

The commentator quotes the following lines on the sacred syllable \tilde{om} , which illustrates what is said above:—

uktō ya esa uccāras tatra yō 'sau sphuran sthitaḥ l avyaklānukṛti-prāyō dhwanir varṇaḥ sa kathyatē ll nāsyōccūrayitā kaścit pratihantā na vidyatē l swayam uccaratē dēvaḥ prāṇinām urasi sthitaḥ ll ēkō nādātmakō varṇaḥ sarva-varṇāvibhāga-vān l sō 'n-astam-ita-rūpatwād anāhata ihoditaḥ ll

That spoken utterance which continues vibrating there (i.e. at the point of utterance), a sound that mostly has the semblance of inarticulateness, is the syllable (om).

There is no one who causes it to be uttered, and no one who checks it. The God dwelling in the human breast utters it Himself.

This one syllable consisting of the Nāda and containing all syllables without distinction, is here called 'unobstructed' because its nature is imperishable.

Or, again, it may be turned to snow. Thus there are three different things; but, on reflection, we see that they are not different.

Lo! By it all things, whether with life or without it, the universe itself, are seen as only Siva. Just as the sun reduces ice and snow to identity with water, so the sun of true knowlege makes the soul recognize not only its identity with the Supreme, but also that the whole universe is one, conjured forth out of the Absolute by the divine Māyā. The day will be extinguished, and night will come;

The surface of the earth will become extended to the sky;

On the day of the new moon, the moon swallowed up the demon of eclipse.

The illumination of the Self in the organ of thought is the true worship of Siva.

Once the mind realizes the true nature of the Self, as one with the Supreme Self, here given the name of Siva, all things fade into nothingness. There is no distinction between day and night, and the boundaries of the apparently solid earth merge into those of the sky, so that earth and sky become one. Nay, the demon of eclipse is eclipsed himself.

According to Hindū tradition, the moon contains sixteen digits, each containing a certain amount of nectar. Each day the gods drink the nectar in one digit, so that on the sixteenth day only one digit remains. This accounts for the waning of the moon. The nectar of the sixteenth day is that which remains over on the day of the new moon. On the occasion of a solar eclipse, the moon and the sun are together, and the nectar of the sixteenth digit, becoming heated and caused to evaporate by the proximity of the sun, ascends into that luminary. Rahu, the demon of eclipse, then swallows the sun in order to drink the nectar. So much for the tradition explanatory of the natural phenomenon. Here Lalla describes the process of absorption in the Sahasrâra (see note on Yoga, § 21). To the fully enlightened soul, the day of earthly illusion disappears, and all is night; the apparently solid earth loses its bounds. and becomes merged in the sky; in the illumination of the Self, so far from Rāhu swallowing (the nectar of) the moon, it is the moon in the Sahasrâra that swallows the dark demon of ignorance.

There is also a more mystical side to this verse. Normally there is a distinction between the subject of cognition (pramatar), the object of cognition (pramaya), and the instrument of cognition (pramana). The pramatar is here typified by Rahu, the demon of lunar eclipse, the prameya by the moon, and the pramana by the sun. The thinker is able to 'swallow the moon', i. e. to think away the phenomenal world into a blank; but he cannot completely dissolve it, for there still exists the triad of pramātar, pramēya, and pramāṇa, until the Parā Saṇvid, or Higher Consciousness, is attained, by which all three are fused together and sublimated into a void of infinite Unity. Lallā here refers to the presence of Parā Saṇvid. Whereas in ordinary meditation 'Rāhu swallows the moon', i.e. the thinker effaces the phenomenal world, the Higher Consciousness (typified by the moon residing in Sahasrāra; see note on Yōga, §§ 19, 20) absorbs the consciousness of the thinker into itself, entirely sublimating its contents into Void.

Look upon thy mind alone as the ocean of existence.

If thou restrain it not, but let it loose, from its rage will issue angry words, like wounds caused by fire.

Yet, if thou weigh them in the scales of truth, their weight is naught.

According to legend, a terribly destructive fire, named vadavágni, is imprisoned at the bottom of the ocean. If it were to burst forth, the whole world would be destroyed. Similarly, if the fire of wrath burst forth from the ocean of the mind, it would leave deadly scars, and yet, to the wise man, it is nothing.

If, instead of $n\bar{a}r\ddot{u}c\ddot{u}$ chokh, we read $n\bar{a}r\dot{a}ts^{i}$ -chokh, which could be spelt in Nāgarī with identically the same letters, we must substitute 'wounds caused by a fishing-spear' for 'wounds caused by fire'. Otherwise the meaning of the verse would be the same.

By (controlling) my vital airs I cut my way through the six forests, till the digit of the moon awoke for me, and the material world dried up within me.

With the fire of love I parched my heart as a man parcheth grain,

And at that moment did I obtain Siva.

In the spiritual body of a man there are six cakras, or seats of a śakti, impelling him to experience the objective universe and to look upon it as real. These must be mastered before true enlightenment is reached, and Lallā compares the process to cutting a way through six forests. A mystical moon, the abode of the Supreme Siva, is supposed to exist under the frontal sinus, and, once he has mastered the six cakras, the devotee becomes cognisant of this moon and is absorbed in the Siva.

The mastery is effected by control and suppression of the vital airs (see Vocab., s. v. $pr\bar{a}n$ 2), and the exciting cause is ardent love, or desire, for Siva. For further particulars, see Vocab., s. vv. sheh and som, and Note on Yoga, §§ 9 ff. and 21.

The wise man knew how to block the wheels (of the chariot) of his outward and inward vital airs, as he seized the horse by the bridle of self-realization.

Or, if we adopt the alternative reading of the last two lines, we must translate them:—

If a man hath not known how to seize the horse by the bridle, the wheels (of the chariot) of his outward and inward vital airs have burst in pieces.

As explained in the notes on the preceding verse, self-realization is obtained by mastering the vital airs. The two principal airs are the outward and the inward, known as prāna and apāṇa. See Vocabulary, s. v. prān, 2, and Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16, 23.

By eating and apparelling the mind will not become at peace.

They only have ascended who have abandoned false hopes.

When they have learnt from the scriptures that the fear of Yama is terrible (to him who is in debt to Desire),

And when the lender hath trusted them not (with a loan), then indeed live they blessed and at peace.

Or, if we adopt the alternative reading, the first two lines must be translated:—

They only who have kept their minds from eating and apparel, and who have abandoned false hopes, will ascend.

Yama is the judge of the soul after death. Desire is compared to a money-lender, who gives a loan of fruition, but demands a hard repayment of principal and interest. Happy indeed is the contented soul to whom he refuses to make the loan.

Quietism and self-command are not required for (the knowledge of) the Self,

Nor by the mere wish wilt thou reach the door of final release.

E'en though a man become absorbed (in his contemplations) as salt is absorbed in water,

Ordinary ascetism, and even ardent desire, are common enough, but without the knowledge of the true nature of Self, they are of no avail for ultimate release.

'Sleep' is the sleep of illusion. 'Uncleanness' is impurity of soul. All action is defilement, and hinders the soul from obtaining final release. But, says Lallā, the real freedom from action is that of the soul. The body may be a slave to duty, and yet the soul may be free.

He who hath recognized the Brahma-randhra as the shrine of the Self-God,

He who hath known the Unobstructed Sound borne upon the breath (that riseth from the heart) unto the nose,

His vain imaginings of themselves have fled far away,

And he himself (recognizeth) himself as the God. To whom else, therefore, should he offer worship?

The 'Unobstructed Sound' is the mystic syllable om, for a full account of which, and for the meaning of this allusion, see the notes on verse 15. Dwādashāntamandal, or, in Sanskrit dwādaśanta-mandala, is the Brahma-randhra (see Note on Yoga, §§ 5, 7, 19, 21, 26). As a technical term it is said at the present day to be a spot or cavity in the anterior fontanelle of the brain, under the frontal sinus. Other authorities identify it with the central canal of the spinal cord. It is closely connected with the Sahasrara, which, in each man, is the abode of the Supreme Siva, who is to be recognized as one with the Self, i.e. as the Supreme Self. Hence. if a man recognize this, he knows that he himself is the Supreme Self within himself, and that it is unnecessary to worship any other deity.

He from whose navel steadfastly proceedeth in its upward course the syllable $\delta \dot{m}$, and naught but it,

And for whom the kumbhaka exercise formeth a bridge to the Brahma-randhra,

He beareth in his mind the one and only mystic spell,

And of what benefit to him are a thousand spells?

Or, if we take the alternative reading of the second line, that line must be translated:—

And whom the kumbhaka exercise leadeth into the abode of the moon by the Brahma-randhra.

This verse, like the preceding, is in praise of the mystic syllable $\delta \dot{m}$, which is here stated to possess all the virtues of all other mystic syllables, or spells, put together. By the 'navel' is meant the kanda, or mysterious bulb supposed to exist in the region of the navel and the pudendum. It is the focal centre of all bodily thought and action, and from it radiate the various tubes through which circulate the vital airs. In the true devotee, the syllable is fixed here, and perpetually rises upwards (as stated in the preceding verse) from the heart.

The kumbhaka or 'jar' exercise consists in meditation accompanied by 'bottling up' or retaining the breath after inspiration ($p\bar{u}raka$). The devotee by this suppression blocks up the vital airs circulating through the tubes radiating from the kanda, and thereby causes the organ of thought to become absorbed into Siva represented by the mystical moon supposed to exist in his brain. For further explanation of this extremely recondite theory, see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and Vocabulary, s. v. sōm,

Regarding the Brahma-randhra, see the note on the preceding verse. It is situated close to the Sahasrara, which is the abode of the moon (see Note on Yōga, §§ 8, 19).

If any man die, it is naught to me; and if I die it is naught to him.

Good is it if I die, and good is it if I live long.

Praise of perfect contentment. The idiom of marem na küh is worth noting. Literally it is 'no one will die for me', or, as we should say in Ireland 'no one will die on me', i.e. if any one die it will not be my business. The commentary here quotes the following verse of Utpala Dēva [Siva-stōtrávalī, xiii. 3] as to the point:—

 $P\bar{u}raka$, or inhalation of the breath, is one of the methods employed to encompass $pr\bar{a}n\bar{a}y\bar{a}ma$, or restraint of the vital airs, a necessary process for the obtainment of complete $y\bar{o}ga$, or union with the Supreme. See Note on Y $\bar{o}ga$, §§ 2, 21, 23, and Vocabulary, s. vv. $n\bar{a}di$ and $pr\bar{a}n$ 2. By these $y\bar{o}ga$ -processes, when a man is reborn into the world, he will be able in it to effect this union. With the second line the commentary compares Bhagavad Gītā, ii. 14, 15:—

By means of intense $y\bar{o}ga$, or concentration of the mind, it is quite possible to achieve magical powers $(vibh\bar{u}ti)$: see note on $Y\bar{o}ga$, § 2), and to perform apparently impossible actions; but this is nothing but the art of a conjurer. The true $y\bar{o}g\bar{i}$ disdains such miraculous powers. The $y\bar{o}ga$ to which he devotes himself is union with the Supreme Self, by acquiring the knowledge of his own Self.

40. The mind is the man, and pure desire is the woman, that bringeth wreaths.

Offer thou the flowers of devotion in His worship.

Nectar of the moon, for ritual, shalt thou make to stream over Him.

By the mystic formula of silence will the Siva-Self become manifest.

A plea for spiritual, as against formal worship. The nectar from the moon refers to the mystic moon in the sahasrára (cf. verse 33) said to abide under the frontal sinus. From this moon a mystic nectar passes into the spiritual frame of the devotee, and enables him to become master of himself. For further particulars, see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 8, 19, 20, 21, and Vocabulary, s.v. sōm.

The mystic formula, or mantra, of silence is the so-called ajapa mantra, in which the devotee utters no sound, but simply performs various exhalations and inhalations. It is also called hamsah (cf. verse 65), in which word the anusvāra or bindu represents Purusa, and the visarga Prakṛti. The Tāntrika-abhidhāna (s. v.) defines ajapā as hamsa, or inspiration + expiration (śvāsa-praśvāsa), saying that 60 śvāsas = 1 prāṇa, 60 prāṇas = 1 nāḍā, 60 nāḍis = 1 ahōrātra (day and night). Thus in one day-night there are 21,600 śvāsa-praśvāsas, or hamsa-japas.

(This verse has throughout a double meaning. The first meaning is:—) Absorbed within Thyself, Thou remainedst hidden from me.

The livelong day I passed seeking for 'me' and 'Thee'.

When I beheld Thee in my Self,

I gave to Thee and to my Self the unrestrained rapture of (our union).

(In the second meaning, the two words me and se, 'I Thee', are taken as one word mese, which means 'earth', and we get the following translation:—)

My body befouled I with mud, and Thou remainedst hidden from me.

The livelong day I passed seeking for mud. When I beheld the mud upon my body.

I gave my body the unrestrained rapture (of union) with the mud.

In the first version, Lalla tells us how, in the days of her ignorance, she imagined that she could distinguish between her Self and the Supreme Self, and then, how, when she had discovered their identity, she was filled with the rapture of union. Moreover, as the Supreme Self was identical with her Self, He also was filled with the same rapture.

In the second version she sarcastically compares earthly possessions and desires to the mud with which an ascetic daubs his body. He who cares for these has all the joys of possession, ignorant of the truth that they are worthless as mud.

In his own loving longing he will ever meditate upon Sambhu.

Action—works, desire—is the great enemy of absorption into the Supreme, and causes perpetual rebirth. By recognizing the identity of the Self with the Supreme, as taught by the guru, or spiritual teacher, a man becomes free from the bond of action.

Sambhu is a name of Siva.

The real insignificance of the universe. As compared with the Universal Self it is of no account; yet foolish mortals look upon it as something wonderful, and enjoy it. Life, too, is but a momentary breath, as compared with eternity; and, in reality, an unsaved soul, in whatever form it may be born, has no time to live, but, from the point of view of Eternity, lives for but an instant, and dies and dies, and is born and reborn, again and again.

48. I, Lallā, wearied myself seeking for Him and searching.

I laboured and strove even beyond my strength.

I began to look for Him, and, lo, I saw that bolts were on His door,

And even in me, as I was, did longing for Him become fixed; and there, where I was, I gazed upon Him.

Then, by God's grace, she was permitted to see that the door of approach to Him was barred to all human effort, and that no strivings of hers were of avail. So she stood there, outside the door, full of naught but longing love, and He revealed Himself to her, for she found Him in her Self.
 - 49. A continuation of the preceding verse. When she had given up effort, and, having cleansed her mind from earthly passions, waited in patience with humility; then, and not till then, did she gain the true wisdom, and her reputation as a prophetess became widely spread.

Three times do I remember a lake overflowing. Once do I remember seeing in the firmament the only existing place. Once do I remember seeing a bridge from Haramukh to Kaŭsar.

Seven times do I remember seeing the whole world a void.

As a result of her having achieved the perfect knowledge, not only, as told in the preceding verse, has she gained a great reputation, but she has become endued with the power of remembering the occurrences of her former lives.

At intervals of a kalpa (i.e. a day of Brahmā, or 432 million years) the universe incurs a partial dissolution (khanda-pralaya). A hundred years of Brahmā—each year being made up of these kalpas, or days of Brahmā—constitutes a mahā-kalpa, or great kalpa. At the end of this vast period of time there is a 'great dissolution' (mahā-pralaya) in which not only is our universe destroyed, but all the worlds of the gods with their inhabitants, and even Brahmā himself.

The lake mentioned by Lallā is, as in verse 47, the universe. By its overflow is meant a partial dissolution, three of which she remembers experiencing. When the only place that exists is the firmament, it is a great dissolution, and she remembers seeing one of these.

Between the peak of Haramukh to the North and the mountain lake of Kaŭsar to the South, lies the Valley of Kashmīr. At the beginning of the kulpa now current this Valley is said to have been a lake called Satīsaras, and across this lake, from Haramukh to Kaŭsar, she remembers a bridge.¹

Seven times altogether she remembers seeing the world becoming absorbed into the Void (cf. Note to Verse 1).

Lalla's object in mentioning these experiences over such enormous periods of time is to emphasize the eternal pre-existence of the soul, and its perpetual birth and rebirth unless released by the true knowledge.

Cf. Verses 93 and 95.

51. Comely and full of sap were they born from the mother,

After causing many a pang to her womb.

Again and again thither did they come, and waited at that door.

Really is but (part of) a district of the earth.

Or the same rock may become (a millstone) for a handsome mill.

53. Doth not the sun cause (everything) to glow in every region?

Doth it cause only each good land to glow? Doth not Varuna enter into every house?

Hardly, in sooth, is Siva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

54. The same woman is a mother, and giveth milk unto her babe.

The same woman, as a wife, hath her special character.

The same woman, as a deceiver, endeth by taking thy life.

Hardly, in sooth, is Siva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

A group of verses linked together by their fourth lines, which are identical in each. Verse 80 belongs also to this group.

51. The soul, while still in the womb of its mother, remembers its former births, and determines to seek release from future transmigration as soon as it is born. But directly it is born it forgets all this, and, becoming entangled in worldly desires, is condemned to visit wombs again and again, and to wait at their doors for admission again into the world. Cf. Verse 87.

As the attainment of Siva is thus hard for a mortal once he is born, Lallā entreats him to heed her doctrine, and thus to obtain release.

- 52. All things are but forms of the Supreme. She uses as a parable the fact that though a pedestal, a pavement, a tract of land, or a millstone, may all differ widely in appearance, at bottom they are all the same—only stone.
- 53. Another parable showing the universality of the Supreme. He is everywhere without exception, just as the sun shines impartially on every spot in the earth, and just as Varuna, the god of water, is found in every house, and not only in the houses of the good. The facts described are those mentioned in Matt. v. 45, but the application is different.

54. Another parable to the same effect. The infinite variety of a woman, as a mother, as a wife, or as a Delilah. Yet she is, throughout all, the same—a woman. The Sanskrit translation makes the Delilah to be the śakti, which misleads people from the truth, appearing at one time as a mother, and at another as a wife, but always a misleader.

But fruitless is every abiding-place, if thou hast not thy mind under subjection.

Some, in the hope of salvation, have abandoned house and home for a hermit's life, and others, in a like hope, have given up such a life, and have become ordinary householders. But it matters not where one lives, so long as one applies oneself to learning the mysteries of Self. The devotee should practise restraining his breath—one of the chief means of securing emancipation. See Verses 37 and 40 and Vocabulary s. vv. nāḍi and prān 2. नाभिस्थान् ॥ क्थियी प्रकत् (sic) जलवन्यी हीळीस् ताँ क्थोयी ईसुर् सुतो ॥ मानसमण्डल् ॥ नद् वहवन्यी ॥ इह तव तूळनो (sic) हाह ॥ तव ततो ॥४५॥] 56. O my Teacher! Thou who art as God to me! Explain thou to me the inner meaning; for it is known to thee.

Two breathings are there, both taking their rise in the City of the Bulb.

Why then is $h^a h$ cold, and $h\bar{a}h$ hot?

57. The region of the navel is by nature fiery hot.

Thence proceedeth thy vital air, rising to thy throat, (and issueth from thy mouth as $h\bar{a}h$).

When it meeteth the river flowing from the Brahma-randhra (it issueth from thy mouth as $h^a h$),

And therefore $h^a h$ is cold, and $h \bar{a} h$ is hot.

These two verses refer to the practice of pranayama, or suppressing the breath in order to obtain $y\bar{\varrho}ga$, or union with the Supreme. Expiration and inhalation are carefully watched and controlled by the $y\bar{\varrho}g\bar{\iota}$. Lallā notices that some of her expirations, which she names h^ah , are cool, while others, which she calls $h\bar{\iota}ah$, are hot. She addresses her guru, or spiritual teacher, whom she has been taught, like all devotees, to recognize as the representative to her of God.

In order to understand the reply, it must be explained that, according to Saiva teaching, situated within the body, between the pudendum and the navel, is a kanda, or bulb, the focus of all bodily action, from which radiate the various $n\bar{a}dis$, or tubes, through which circulate the pranas, or vital airs. This kanda is called kandā-purā, or 'City of the Bulb', in verse 56, and $n\bar{a}bi$ -sthān, or that which has its position near the navel, in verse 57. One of the vital airs—called the prana $\kappa \alpha \tau'$ ' $\xi \rho \chi \dot{\eta} \nu$ —rises directly from the kanda through the windpipe, and is expired through the mouth. Hence it is hot. For further particulars, see the Note on Yōga, § 5, and the Vocabulary, s. vv. kandā-purā, $n\bar{a}di$, and pran, 2. So much for the hot air.

The Brahma-randhra is the anterior fontanelle in the upper part of the head (§§ 5, 27). Near this is the sahasrāra (§§ 19, 20, 21, 27), a spot which is the upper extremity of the tube called the susumnā nāḍi, the other extremity of which is the kanda already mentioned.

cold.

This sahasrāra is considered to be the abode of that emanation of the Supreme Siva which is the man's Self, and which is mystically spoken of as the moon. The moon is universally looked upon as the source of coldness, and hence the vital air passing down the susumnā nāḍi is cold. When this meets the hot air, prāṇa, coming upwards from the kanda (close to which is the microcosmic sun, §§ 5, 8, 9, 21), this prāṇa is deprived of its heat by contact with the down-flowing stream, and hence, in this case, the expired air is cold. For further particulars, see the Vocabulary, s. v. sōm.

 H^ah is a short abrupt expiration, and $h\bar{a}h$ is a prolonged one; and at the bottom of the teacher's explanation lies the idea that in the short expiration the hot upward current of air suddenly meets the downward current of cold air, and is checked by it. Hence it is cooled. On the other hand, a prolonged expiration has time to recover itself and to regain its heat. The sun is located in the pelvis, and so the upward breath is hot; and the moon is at the brain, and its currents are downwards and

There is no 'Thou', no 'I', no object of contemplation, not even contemplation.

It is only the All-Creator, who Himself became lost in forgetfulness.

The blind folk saw not any meaning in this, But when they saw the Supreme, the seven worlds became lost in nothingness.

All that exists is but the Supreme in one or other of His manifestations. When, therefore, an untaught man knows not the unity of Self and all creation with the Supreme Self, and imagines that there is a difference between 'I' and 'thou', or between contemplation and its object, it is really the Supreme, temporarily blinded by His own illusive power, Who is lost in this ignorance. This paradox, and the logical inference to be derived from it cannot be understood by the blind, i. e. those who are sunk in ignorance of the nature of things. But when a man has once grasped the facts, the whole universe disappears for him, and he gains release.

The last line may also be translated, 'but good men become absorbed in Him, when once they gain sight of the Supreme.' So interpreted by Rājānaka Bhāskara.

(From the printed edition. The third half-line does not scan, the metre being Śārdūlavikrīdita. The u of anu should be long. As it falls on the cæsura, possibly the author intended it to be long by metrical licence. There are similar cases in his translations of verses 32, 50, and 56; cf. also verse 45.)]

I searched for myself, and wearied myself in vain,

For no one hath, I ween, e'er by such efforts reached the hidden knowledge.

Then absorbed I myself in It, and straightway reached the abode of nectar,

Where there are many filled jars, but no one drinketh from them.

No human efforts can gain the perfect knowledge. This is obtained only by quietism and the grace of the Supreme. 'It' in which Lalla became absorbed is the tat of the famous Upanisadic formula tat tvam asi, 'thou art It', the essence of the Saiva doctrines. Once she had grasped the identity of her Self with the Supreme Self, she reached the Al-than. This word means literally 'the abode of wine', i.e. nectar. The abode of nectar is the moon, in which nector is produced month by month. As explained under verses 56, 57, and in the Note on Yōga, § 19, a mystic moon, representing the Supreme, exists in the spot in the brain called the sahasrara. practising yoga, a devotee is finally absorbed microcosmically into the sahasrára, and macrocosmically into the Supreme. Lalla laments that so few avail themselves of this means of salvation. The wine of salvation is there, but few there be that drink of it.

The pronominal suffix m in wôtum is a kind of dativus commodi, and means 'in my opinion'.

Al-thān is also explained as a contraction of alam-sthāna, the place of 'enough', where everything is exactly balanced, and which can only be described by negation of all qualifications, 'néli, néli', i.e. the Supreme. In either interpretation the resultant meaning is the same.

Whatever work I may do, the burden of the completion thereof lieth on myself,

But the earnings and the collecting of the fruits thereof are another's.

If in the end, without thought for their fruits, I lay these works as an offering before the Supreme Self,

Then, where'er I may go, there is it well for me.

The vanity of human wishes. The ordinary worldling performs actions for the sake of what he may gain by them; but these gains cannot follow him to another world. They are left behind to his 'laughing heirs'.

The true believer, without thought of reward, does his duty, and offers all that he does to God; and it is he who after death reaps the full fruit of his actions in the shape of final release. This is one of the fundamental doctrines of the Bhagavad $G\bar{\imath}t\bar{a}$. If a man engages in worldly affairs for the lusts of the flesh, he damns his soul; if he takes them up without regard to their fruits, solely from the sense of duty $(karma-y\bar{o}ga)$ and the love of God $(bhakti-y\bar{o}ga)$, he saves his soul.

He who gaineth a kingdom is he who hath wielded a sword.

He who gaineth paradise is he who mortifieth himself and who giveth in charity.

He who hath knowledge of the nature of the Self, is he who followeth the Guru's teaching.

That which reapeth the fruit of virtue and of vice is a man's own Self.

Every action has its fruit. The exercise of worldly activity produces worldly prosperity. If a man pursues a formal religion, he reaps the fruit in paradise, which is transient, and from which, when the fruits of his pious actions have been exhausted, he will be subject to rebirth.

The one hope of ultimate release is the acquirement of the true knowledge of the Self, and this can only be acquired from the teaching of a Saiva Guru, or spiritual preceptor.

The way of knowledge is a garden of herbs.

Thou must enclose it with the hedge of quietism and self-restraint and pious deeds.

Thus will thy former deeds be offered like beasts at the Mothers' sacrifice,

And, by steady eating of its crop, the garden will become empty and bare.

Deeds are of two kinds,—the deeds of former lives, of which the accumulated results still persist, and the deeds done in the present life. Both kinds have results, through the action of the endless chain of cause and effect, and so long as these results continue to exist, ultimate release is impossible.

In the garden of knowledge, the herbs are the deeds of the present life. It must be carefully guarded from outside temptations by the performance of the daily obligatory religious rites and the practice of quietism and self-restraint. In this garden are allowed to browse the goats destined to sacrifice, typifying the works of former lives, the fruits of which are the existing crop—the deeds of the present life. Hemmed in by the hedge of holy works, the goats are compelled to eat this crop, or, in other words, the works of former lives are compelled to render themselves unfruitful. This unfruitfulness is consummated by the sacrifice of the goats, and when that is accomplished the soul becomes assimilated to the Supreme Void, the Śūnya. See Vocabulary, s. v. shūñ.

A Lāmā is one of the divine Mothers, to whom animals are offered in sacrifice. See Vocabulary, s. v. lāmā, for further particulars.

If, in flux of time, thou hast destroyed the whole body of thy desires,

Choose ye a home-life, or choose ye a hermitage.

If thou wilt come to know that the Lord is all-pervading and without taint,

Then, as thou wilt know, so wilt thou be.

Freedom from desire and knowledge of the nature of the Self give ultimate release, whether a man lead the life of a householder or bury himself in a hermitage. The mode of life is immaterial. With this knowledge, his own soul becomes assimilated to his conception of the nature of the Supreme; and he becomes spiritually one with Him.

He who ever calleth on the name of Siva and who beareth in mind the Way of the Swan,

Even if night and day he remain busy with his worldly calling,

And who without thought for fruits maketh his mind non-dualist,

On him alone is ever gracious the Lord of the Chiefest of gods.

The Way of the Swan is a mystic name for the celebrated formula $s\bar{o}$ 'ham, I am He (cf. the tat tvam asi, thou art It, of verse 60). In Sanskrit letters, if the words $s\bar{o}$ 'ham be reversed, they become hamsah, a word which means 'swan'. Hence the origin of the term. The devout believer must perform his necessary religious duties, but, as explained under verse 61, without thought of the reward that they may bring. Hamsa is a term often applied to the Supreme Siva dwelling in the Sahasrâra and identical with the individual soul (see Note on Yōga, § 20). The full title, in this sense, is Parama-hamsa. The word is also used to indicate the Ajapa mantra. See verse 40.

The non-dualist mind is that which fully recognizes the identity of the Self with the Supreme Self,—that all is one, not two, or manifold.

Hast thou sown such seed that it will bear abounding fruit?

Fool! teaching proffered to thee is but balls flung at a boundary-pillar.

It is all lost, as though sweet stuff were fed unto a tawny bullock.

Just as a degraded Camār, whose whole occupation is with that which is dead and foul, cares for a hide by cutting it into its intended shape and pegging it out to dry, so the worldly man cherishes his body, which itself is but a hide, and stretches it out over the world of enjoyment with the pegs of desire. On the other hand, the wise man is like a decent husbandman. He sows the living seed that shall spring up and bear the harvest of spiritual blessing.

Instruction given to the foolish worldly man returns to the giver, as a ball in the game of hockey bounds back from one of the goal-pillars.

To give instruction to such a person is as much lost labour as it is to feed a lusty bullock with sweetmeats in the hope of increasing its milk. 'Bullock's milk' is a common phrase used to indicate a hoped-for but impossible result. Here the fool not only believes in its existence but tries to increase its yield. $G\bar{o}r$, molasses, is often given to a cow to increase her milk. The fool tries it on a bullock.

Alas! why hast thou forgotten the nature of thy Self?

Lallā addresses herself as 'Good Sir'.

The iron anchor—a common object in Kashmīr navigable rivers—is worldly possessions that tie a man's soul down to this world. None of these will he carry with him after death.

And there, O Joy! saw I Śiva seated united with His Śakti.

There became I absorbed in the lake of nectar.

Now, what can (existence) do unto me? For, even though alive, I shall in it be dead.

The first line contains a paronomasia. The word soman may be the Persian word meaning 'jasmine', or may be the Indian word meaning 'my own mind' or 'soul'. We have attempted to indicate this in the translation.

Siva united in one with His Sakti, or energic power, is the highest form of the Supreme Self. The lake of nectar is a metaphor for the bliss of union with the Supreme. Drowned in this, though alive, Lallā is as it were dead, and is certain of release from future birth, life, or death.

With a rein did I hold back the steed of my thought.

By ardent practice did I bring together the vital airs of my ten $n\bar{u}dis$.

Therefore did the digit of the moon melt and descend unto me,

And a void became merged within the Void.

The rein by which she holds back the steed of her thought is the absence of desire.

The $z\bar{a}dis$ are the tubes in the body through which the vital airs are believed to circulate, and it is the devotee's object to bring these airs under subjection. See the Vocabulary s. vv. $n\bar{a}di$ and $pr\bar{a}n$, 2, and Note on $Y\bar{a}ga$, §§ 5, 21.

The mystic moon in the sahasrara has been explained above under verses 40 and 56, 57. When the devotee has completely blocked the circulation of his vital airs, this moon distils nectar, as there explained. See also Note on Yoga, §§ 8, 19, 21, 22.

For the empty void of matter merging into the great Void, see verse 11.

73. A royal chowry, sunshade, chariot, throne,

Happy revels, the pleasures of the theatre, a bed of cotton down,—

Bethink thee which of these is lasting in this world,

And how can it take from thee the fear of death.

74. In thy illusion why didst thou sink in the stream of the ocean of existence?

When thou hadst destroyed the high-banked road, there came before thee the slough of spiritual darkness.

At the appointed time will Yama's apparitors drag thee off in woful plight.

Who can take from thee the fear of death?

75. Works two are there, and causes three. On them practise thou the kumbhaka-yōga.

Then, in another world, wilt thou gain the mark of honour.

Arise, mount, pierce through the sun's disk.

Then will flee from thee the fear of death.

76. Clothe thou thy body in the garb of knowledge.

Brand thou on thy heart the verses that Lalla spake.

With the help of the pranava Lalla absorbed herself

In union with the Soul-light, and so expelled the fear of death

These four verses form a group.

73. The chowry, or fly-whisk, and the sunshade are emblems of royalty. So strong is this feeling about the sunshade, or, in plain English, the umbrella, that some years ago a serious riot took place in southern India, due to the fact that some low-caste people had taken to going about with cheap cotton umbrellas imported from England. People of such eastes had no right to protect themselves from the sun or rain!

74. The high-banked road is the way of truth, by which the Self is enabled to approach the Supreme Self. These high embanked roads across marshy country are common features of a Kāshmīrī landscape.

Yama is the god who rules the land of shades. His apparitors carry off the soul after death for judgement by him, cruelly treating it on the way. Chōra-dārĕ karun is the name of a punishment, in which the criminal is dragged along the ground till the blood flows from his body in streams.

75. Works are of two kinds, good and bad. There are three causes of the apparent existence of the material world, which are technically known as malas or impurities. These are (1) anava-mala, or the impurity due to the soul deeming itself to be finite; (2) māyīya-mala, or the impurity due to the cognition that one thing is different from another; and (3) kārma-mala, resulting in action the producer of pleasure and pain.

It is the devotee's business to destroy the fruits of all works, whether good or bad, and to destroy these malas. This he does by practising $y\bar{o}ga$. One important form of yōga is the kumbhaka-yōga, in which the breath is entirely suspended. Kömbith literally means 'bottling up (the breath)'. Cf. verse 34, and see the Vocabulary, s. vv. kāran and kumbu. The disembodied soul, on its way to emancipation, is said to pass through the sun's orb on its way to union with the Supreme.

76. The pranava is one of the names of the mystic syllable om, for which see verses 14, 15.

See remarks on verse 10.]

Ah! thou hasty one, feed thou those fatted rams—the five principles of experience—on the grain and cates of spiritual meditation, and then slay them.

Not till then wilt thou gain the knowledge of the place of the Supreme, and (thou wilt also know that) if thou violate custom it is all the same, and causeth thee no loss.

Lallā is said to have made a practice of going about in a nude condition, 'for', said she, 'he only is a man who fears God, and there are few such about'. See verse 94 and the note to K. Pr., p. 20, below. This verse appears to be an answer of hers to some woman who remonstrated with her for not following the usual customs in regard to female dress.

The five $bh\bar{u}tas$, or $mah\bar{u}bh\bar{u}tas$, are the five factors constituting the principles of experience of the sensible universe. They are solidity, liquidity, formativity, aeriality, and vacuity. For further particulars, see the Vocabulary, s. v. $b\bar{u}th$, 2.

Just as a ram fattened on fruits and such like has but the smallest beginning in his mother's womb, and grows to great size and vigour before he is ready for sacrifice, so these principles are developed from earlier, subtile, capacities (tanmātras), and under the influence of the chain of cause and effect, which result in illusion $(m\bar{a}y\bar{a})$, become powerful and conceal from the soul its knowledge of its real Self.

In order to attain to true knowledge, the seeker must first certify to himself the essential nothingness of these five bhūtas, and cause them to disappear one by one from his experience, by meditating on, and realizing, the nature of Self. Just as a fatted ram is prepared for sacrifice and death by feeding it on grain and cakes, so these must be prepared for disappearance by this meditation and realization.

The 'violation of custom' is literally 'the left-handed conduct' and there is probably a suggestion of the $v\bar{a}ma-m\bar{a}rga$, or left-handed, Kaula, ritual. Cf. the last line of verse 10.

78. Who is he that is wrapped in sleep, and who is he that is awake?

What lake is that which continually oozeth away?

What is that which a man may offer in worship to Hara?

What is that supreme station to which thou wilt attain?

79. The mind is he who is wrapped in sleep, and when it hath transcended the kula it is he who is awake.

The five organs are the lake that continually oozeth away.

That holy thing which a man may offer in worship to Hara is the discrimination of the Self.

That supreme station to which thou wilt attain is the Spirit-Śiva.

78. Hara is a name of Siva, the personal form of the impersonal Supreme.

79. The manas, or mind, is, roughly speaking, the thinking faculty. For a more accurate description, see the Vocabulary, s. v. man.

The kula, or family, is a group of the following essentials for the experience of the existence of the Self, as distinct from the Supreme Self:—(1) the individual soul; (2) Prakrti, or primal matter,—that on which the individual soul acts, and which reacts on it; (3) space—i.e. the conception of limitation in space; (4) time—i.e. the conception of limitation in time; and (5-9) the five bhūtas, or principles of experience, as described under verse 77. When the mind transcends these, and recognizes its Self as one with the limitless Supreme Self, it is in a state of grace, or, as here said, it is awake. The commentary quotes here the following lines; the first is anonymous, and the rest = Bhagavad Gitā, ii. 69:—

mana ēva manuṣyāṇāṁ kāraṇaṁ bandha-mōkṣayōḥ N yā niśā sarva-bhūtānāṁ tasyāṁ jāgarti saṁyamī N yasyāṁ jāgrati bhūtāni sā niśā pasyatō munēḥ N

It is the mind alone that is the cause of men's entanglement and of their release.

In that which to all embodied beings is night, doth the ascetic remain awake.

And that in which they wake, is the night for the saint who hath eyes to see.

The five organs, or principles, of action are those of generation, exerction, locomotion, handling, and expression by voice. The continual exercise of these takes away the power of Self-realization.

If I had known how by my mind to bring into subjection my nādis,

How to cut, how to bind up; then should I have known how to crush sorrow,

And gradually to compound the Great Elixir.

Hardly, in sooth, is Siva to be found. Meditate therefore on the doctrine.

As previously explained (see Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and verse 69), the nādis are the tubes through which the vital airs circulate. It is the devotee's business to bring the latter under control. Tatun watun, cutting and binding up, is the Kāshmīrī term for operative surgery. Lallā implies that this must be performed upon the mind, which must be cut away from the organs of action (see the preceding Verse), and bound up by self-restraint and quietism.

The Elixir of Life is, of course, the knowledge of the Self.

She had been born again and again, but in former births she had not known the Self. The Sindhu is one of the chief rivers of Kashmīr, famous for its excellent water. She had been born in various forms, divine, human, bestial, as a worm, or what not, and each time had drunk the water of the Sindhu, playing many parts on the stage of human existence. She had been born over and over again as a human being, so to speak eating, i.e. experiencing, human flesh, and now at length she has recognized that it has been the one Self all the time, and that all these existences in ignorance had been profitless.

When by concentration of my thoughts I brought the pranava under my control,

I made my body like a blazing coal.

The six paths I traversed and gained the seventh,

And then did I, Lallā, reach the place of illumination.

The pranava is the mystic syllable $\bar{o}m$, and here may be taken as indicating any vital formula, such, for instance, as tat tvam asi (see verse 60). She brought this under control, i.e. she mastered it, and thus became imbued with the truth. She then became able to suppress her vital airs (see Note on Yōga, § 21 and Vocabulary s. vv. $n\bar{a}di$ and $pr\bar{a}n$, 2), and thereby entered into a state of grace. By this suppression her frame became suffused with a holy fire.

The six ways are the six cakras, or seats of the six subordinate Śuktis that urge a man to action. They are supposed to be located along what corresponds to the spinal cord of a man's subtile body. The devotee has to master these one by one, and then attains to the seventh and highest station, or sahasrára cakra, by meditating on which he obtains final release. The whole process is explained in greater detail in the Note on Yōga, §§ 9-21, and Vocabulary, s. vv. $sh\check{e}h$ and $s\bar{o}m$.

The word sath-mary may mean either the seventh path or the true path, in either case indicating the sahasrára cakra.

She has seen the injustice of this world, and longs for freedom from the desire for existence. In all these verses but one tale hath fallen to my lot.

I, Lallā, have happened on a lake, and know not on what sand-bank I shall run aground.

85. What is this that hath happened? What kind hath bechanced me?

I made all things out of order, on what sandbank shall I run aground?

* * * * * * * *

It turned out well for me, for I myself will learn to know (my Self).

These are two of Lallā's hard sayings which are unintelligible at the present day, although there is no dispute as to the text.

84. The meaning of the word huda-hudañĕy in the second line of this verse is unknown to modern Kāshmīrīs, and without knowing their meaning, there is no clue to the sense of the rest of the line. The remaining words of the line in the modern language might mean, 'my claw has been cut (?) by a blow', but whether they bore this meaning in Lallā's time is doubtful.

The latter half of the verse is fairly plain. The one plaint of all her verses is the miserable uncertainty of human existence in this world, till a man has known the Supreme.

85. In this verse it is the third line that is devoid of meaning to Kāshmīrīs of the present day. The actual words might mean 'for plastering my ceiling I got a clumsy carpenter', but it is not likely that this is what Lallā originally intended, or wrote. The word abakh is not used nowadays, and there is no tradition as to its meaning, but there is a word abakhwārĕñ which means 'clumsy'.

Once wast thou a swan, and now thou hast become mute.

Some one, I know not who, hath run off with something of thine.

As soon as the mill became stopped, the grain channel became choked,

And away ran the miller with the grain.

This is another of Lalla's hard sayings, the true interpretation of which is unknown. The swan is fabled to have a very melodious voice, and (Lalla is addressing herself) she whose voice was once like that of a swan has now become dumb.

When a mill-stone stops revolving, the orifice in the upper stone, through which the grain is fed on its way to being ground, becomes blocked up and hidden under a pile of grain. The meaning of the metaphor, and who is represented by the miller, is uncertain. The verse has a curious echo of Ecclesiastes xii. 3-4. Perhaps Lalla means that she has now found salvation, and is in a state of silent rapture. Formerly she had preached volubly (cf. verse 89); but now that she sees God she is silent. God is the miller, who turns the mill of worldly experience in order to grind out the grain of the chastened soul. Now He has finished His work. The mill is still. the channel blocked by the husks, and the Miller has taken to Himself the grain. But it must be understood that this is entirely our own attempted interpretation, and has no Kāshmīrī authority.

87. Even while in thy mother's womb thou madest a yow.

When, Sir, will that vow come to thy remembrance?

Die, Sir, even before thy death,

Then, when thy death cometh, great honour will increase for thee.

88. Let not the ass loose to stray from thy guiding hand,

Or, of a surety, will it devour thy neighbour's saffron-garden.

Who then will there be there to offer his back to thee to mount,

Where the sword will fall upon thy naked form?

87. It is believed that while a child is in its mother's womb it remembers all its former births, and resolves in its coming life to act so as to acquire release from further transmigration. But directly it is born, recollection of these previous existences disappears and it loses all memory of its resolution. The same idea is developed in verse 51.

Here Lallā reproaches an unbeliever with this act of forgetfulness. She advises him, while yet alive, to become as one dead (cf. verse 12), by destroying the six enemies—lust, wrath, desire, arrogance, delusion, and jealousy (see Vocabulary s. v. $l\bar{u}b$)—and thus acquiring complete indifference to worldly temptations. The resultant honour is, of course, absorption into the Supreme Self—contrasted with the objects of the worldly ambition practised by her auditor.

The commentator here quotes the following apposite lines from the Bhayavad Gitā (v. 23):—

śaknōtíháva yah södhum prāk śarīra-vimōkṣanāt v kāma-krōdhódbhavam vēgam sa yuktah sa sukhī narah w

He who has strength to bear here ere release from the body the passion born of love and wrath, is of the Rule, he is a happy man. (Barnett's Translation.)

88. The ass is the mind. Keep it under control, or it will wander forth into strange heresies, and will suffer in consequence.

The saffron-gardens are the most valuable cultivated land in Kāshmīr. An ass loose in one might do incalculable damage, and would suffer accordingly. Apparently, in Lallā's metaphor, the ass's owner, in such a case, would be liable to the extreme penalty of the law.

In the second half of the verse, if the mind is not controlled, and does not recognize the nature of Self, it can give no help when its owner is at the point of death, under the sword of Yama.

The commentator quotes as apposite the following lines from the Bhagavad Gītā (ii. 60-63):—

yatatō hy api Kunntēya puruṣasya vipaścitah t undriyāṇi pramāthīni haranti prasabham manaḥ tt tāni sarvāṇi samyamya yukta āsīta mat-paraḥ t vaśē hi yasyendriyāṇi tasya prajūā pratisthitā tt dhyāyatō viṣayān pumsaḥ samgas tēṣāpajāyatē t samgāt samjāyatē kāmaḥ kāmāt krōdhō 'bhijāyatē tt krōdhād bhavati sammōhaḥ sammōhāt smrti-vibhramaḥ t smrti-bhramṣād buddhi-nāśō buddhi-nāśāt praṇaśyati tt

For though the prudent man strive, O son of Kuntī, his froward instruments of sense carry away his mind perforce.

Let him hold all these in constraint and sit under the Rule, given over to Me; for he who has his sense-instruments under his sway has wisdom abidingly set.

In the man whose thoughts dwell on the ranges of sense arises attachment to them; from attachment is born love; from love springs wrath.

From wrath is confusion born; from confusion wandering of memory; from breaking of memory wreck of understanding; from wreck of understanding a man is lost. (Barnett's Translation.)

prān ta ruhun kunuy zônum prān bazith labi na sād prān bazith kēh-ti nō khĕzē taway lobum 'sō-'ham' sād

[In these verses a number of words have double meanings, so that the whole has two different interpretations. Compare verse 101. The first interpretation is:—]

- 89. Helpless and wretched made I my cry in the market,
- 'Here for you be lotus-stalks. Will ye not buy?'

Then again I returned, and, behold, how well I cried,

'Onions and garlic will ye not buy?'

90. I came to know that onion and garlic are the same.

If a man fry onion he will have no tasty dish.

If a man fry onion, let him not eat a scrap thereof.

Therefore found I the flavour of 'I am He'.

- 89. Lotus-stalks stewed with meat are freely eaten in Kashmīr, and are sold in the markets.
- 90. Onions fried by themselves make only an evilsmelling mess, of no use as food. The above is the exoteric interpretation of the two verses. The sense is not very great, and, unless there is some double meaning in the words $s\bar{o}$ -'hum, which we have not discovered, the double entente breaks down in the last line of the second verse.

[The second, esoteric interpretation is:—]

- 89. Helpless and wretched made I my cry in the world,
- 'Here be a thing of no worth. Will ye not therefore take it?'

Then again returning (to my senses), behold, how well I cried,

- 'The breathing body and the soul will ye not take (under your control)?'
- 90. I came to know that the breathing body and the soul are one.

That if a man cherish his body, the flavour (of true bliss) he will not gain.

That if he cherish his body, therefrom will he reap no true joy.

And so I gained for myself the flavour of 'I am He'.

- 89. In her early days, before she had reached a knowledge of her Self, she had been offering worthless teaching to the people, and had urged them to accept it. Then, again, when she had learnt the truth, she came and urged them to practise $y\bar{o}ga$ by controlling their vital breaths (see Vocabulary, s. vv. $n\bar{a}di$ and $pr\bar{a}n$, 2) and by mastering a knowledge of the nature of the soul. The word $pr\bar{a}n$, vital breath, is here used to indicate the body, which exists by breathing.
- 90. Cherishing the body and devoting oneself to worldly enjoyments give no profit. The word 'to eat' also means 'to eat the good things of this life', 'to enjoy oneself', and this gives the double meaning to the third line. Cherishing the body may give apparent temporary pleasure, but even this is mixed with pain, and in the end there is no profit—only ceaseless soul-wandering. Lallā grasps the fact, and thereby discovers the rapture of the great truth contained in the formula 'I am He', or tat tvam asi, 'thou art It', for which see verse 60.

92. In the coming days so malformed will be natures,

That pears and apples will ripen with the apricots.

Hand in hand, from the house will go forth mother and daughter,

And with strange men will they consort day after day.

- 91. A wail over the evil times in store. Even holy men have no memory of past times and of past existences, to profit by it. So then what chance have the children,—the coming generation,—in this evil Kali age?
- 92. Times will become more and more evil, and there is none to warn or to guide to the true knowledge.

Human nature itself will change for the worse, as if pears and apples, whose ripening time is the late autumn, were to change and ripen with the apricots in the height of the rainy season. All women will be unchaste. Mother and daughter, hand in hand,—i.e. pimping for each other,—will go abroad in search of strange men.

The main idea of this verse has survived in a familiar Kāshmīrī proverb,—těli, hā māli, āsan kiyāmatāki kēran, yĕli tāthi papan tēran-sūti. When apples ripen at the same time as apricots, then, O father, will come the day of resurrection, i.e. it will come on a day and at an hour when men look not for it. Cf. K. Pr. 214.

The soul is ever new and new; the moon is ever new and new.

So saw I the waste of waters ever new and new. But since I, Lallā, scoured my body and my mind,

I, Lallā, am ever new and new.

The human soul, subject to illusion and worldly desires, is ever changing in its outward appearance, from birth to birth, although it is always the same; just as the moon is always the same moon, though perpetually waxing and waning.

The universe itself, though the same throughout, at stated intervals undergoes dissolution into a waste of waters, and is afterwards re-formed again; and Lallā herself remembers seeing this in former births (cf. verses 50 and 96).

Then at length Lalla scours illusion from her mind, and she becomes a new creature, for now she knows her Self.

gŏran won^unam kunuy watun nĕb^ara dop^unam und^aray atun suy gauv Lali mĕ wākh ta watun taway mĕ hyotum nangay natun

My teacher spake to me but one precept. He said unto me, 'from without enter thou the inmost part'.

> That to me became a rule and a precept, And therefore naked began I to dance.

The Guru, or spiritual preceptor, confides to his disciple the mysteries of religion. Lalla's account is that he taught her to recognize the external world as naught but an illusion, and to restrict her thoughts to meditation on her inner Self. When she had grasped the identity of her Self with the Supreme Self, she learnt to appreciate all externals at their true value. So she abandoned even her dress, and took to going about naked.

With this may be compared the concluding lines of verse 77, and the note to K. Pr. 20. The wandering of Lallā in a nude condition is the subject of more than one story in Kashmīr. Here she says that she danced in this state. Filled with the supreme rapture, she behaved like a madwoman.

The dance, called tāndava, of the naked devotee is supposed to be a copy of the dance of Siva, typifying the course of the cosmos under the god's rule. It implies that the devotee has wholly surrendered the world, and become united with Siva.

kyāh kara pöntan dahan ta kāhan wŏkh-shun yith lĕjē karith yim gaiy söriy samahön yith razi lamahön ada kyāzi rāvihē kāhan gāv What shall I do to the five, to the ten, to the eleven.

Who scraped out this pot and departed?

Had they all united and pulled upon this rope,

Then how should the cow of the eleven owners have been lost?

The 'five' are the five bhūtas, or principles of experience of the material world (see verse 77 and Vocabulary, s. v. būth, 2). The 'ten' are the ten principal and secondary vital airs (see Vocabulary, s. v. prān, 2). The 'eleven' are the five organs (indriya) of sense (jñānêudriya), and the five organs of action (karmēudriya) (see Vocabulary s. v. yundu), together with the thinking faculty or manas (see Vocabulary, s. v. man) which rules them, as the eleventh.

If all these could be controlled, and were all united in the one endeavour to compass Self-realization, there would have been a chance of success; but they all pull in different directions, one misdirecting the soul hither, and another thither, to the soul's ruin. It is like a cow owned by eleven masters, each of whom holds it by a separate rope, and each of whom pulls it in a different direction. The result is the loss, i. e. the destruction, of the cow.

The 'pot' which they have scraped out is the soul. Just as people take a pot of food, and ladle out its contents, scraping out the last dregs; so these have taken the last dregs of worldly enjoyment out of the soul for their own purposes, and have then gone away and left it helpless. They themselves have gained only temporary joys, while the soul has lost its opportunity of union with the Supreme.

For a moment saw I a bush all flowers. For a moment saw I nor rose nor thorn.

97. For a moment saw I a cooking-hearth ablaze.

For a moment saw I nor fire nor smoke.

For a moment saw I the mother of the Pāṇḍavas.

For a moment saw I an aunt of a potter's wife.

These two verses form one of Lalla's best known sayings. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 47. The subject is the impermanence of everything material.

'But pleasures are like poppies spread, You seize the flower, its bloom is shed; Or, like the snow-fall in the river, A moment white, then melts for ever.'

- 96. The river is a stream confined within bounds. The next thing seen is the infinite waste of waters at a general dissolution of the universe. Cf. verses 50 and 93.
- 97. The Pāṇḍavas, the famous heroes of the Mahā-bhārata, were kings, and their mother, Kuntī, was a queen. Yet, through treachery, they were all at one time reduced to the direst misery, and wandered hungry and thirsty till they came to the city of King Drupada. Here, with their mother, the Pāṇḍavas, disguised as mendicant Brāhmaṇas, found refuge in the hut of a potter, and supported themselves by begging. Lallā adds that the potter's wife, or her children, called Kuntī their aunt. This is contrary to the Mahābhārata story, for it would make out that the Pāṇḍavas and their mother posed as potters, not as Brāhmaṇas. It is a curious fact that the stories of the great Indian epics, as told in Kashmīr, sometimes differ widely from the Sanskrit texts current in India proper. For instance, in a Kāshmīrī Rāmāyaṇa, Sītā is represented as the daughter of Mandōdarī, the wife of Rāvaṇa.

* V. l. swa-mana-sothi-manz

† V. l. Har-nāv na athē. Also atē

By a way I came, but I went not by the way. While I was yet on the midst of the embankment with its crazy bridges, the day failed for me.

I looked within my poke, and not a cowry came to hand (or, atē, was there).

What shall I give for the ferry-fee?

Or, if we adopt the alternative readings, we must translate:—

By a way I came, but I went not by the way.

While I was yet on the midst of the embankment of my own mind, the day failed for me.

I looked within my poke, and found not Hara's name.

What shall I give for a ferry-fee?

Another of Lalla's most popular sayings, current in many forms besides the two quoted above. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 18. Both the readings given above are probably correct, and the verse has thus a double meaning.

By 'way' is meant a highway, as distinct from an uncertain track. This highway is birth as a human being capable of gaining salvation, and it was Lalla's good fortune to come into the world by it. But she did not avail herself of the opportunity; and so, when she died, she left the highway of salvation, and was compelled to be born and reborn.

If, in the third line, we take the reading 'hār', or 'cowry', the allusion is to the belief that when a person dies his soul has to cross the river Vaitarani, and passes through many dangers in the course of its traverse. If a small piece of money is placed in his mouth at the time of death, he can use it to pay for a ferry-boat to bring him across. For further particulars see the note to K. Pr. 18. A sum is a crazy bridge of one or two planks or sticks thrown across a gap in an embankment.

If, however, we take the other reading 'Har', i.e. Hara or Siva, instead of har, we get Lalla's esoteric It is not the literal cowry that she missed, but the name of Siva, which she found not in the pocket of her mind. The pronunciation of suman (plural dative of sum) is, in Kashmiri, practically the same as that of swa-man or soman, one's own mind; so that, as read out or recited without regard to spelling, the verse has a double meaning. When she died, she found that in her lifetime she had not stored up a knowledge of the Supreme Siva, i.e. of the Supreme Self, in her intellect; and therefore on her deathbed found no saving grace, or, as she expresses it, she found herself in the dark on some crazy bridge over a fathomless abyss, and had nothing available to pay for the boat of salvation to ferry her across.

The moral is that, inasmuch as birth in a human body is the only chance that a soul has of being saved, when it is fortunate enough to obtain such a birth it should spend its lifetime in gaining a knowledge of the Supreme Self.

100. Give thou breath to the bellows,

Two more very popular verses of Lallā's. Another version will be found in K. Pr. 46. Lallā is addressing herself.

99. She has begun to receive instruction, and urges herself to go forward. The desire of knowledge has come to her, and she must seek for the Friend—the Supreme Self.

100. Just as a blacksmith controls the pipe of his bellows, and with the air thus controlled, turns his rough iron into what he desires; so must she control the vital airs circulating through her pipes or $n\bar{a}dis$, and thus convert the crude iron of her soul into the gold of the Supreme Self. See Note on Yōga, §§ 5, 21, and . Vocabulary, s. vv. $n\bar{a}di$ and $pr\bar{a}n$, 2.

As for the meaning of dam dyunu see the next verse.

dēhacē larē dārē bar trŏp^ūrim prāna-būr roţum ta dyut^umas dam hrēdayēcē kūṭh^arē-andar gonḍum ōmaki cōbaka tul^umas bam [This verse is capable of a double interpretation, depending on the two meanings of the word $pr\bar{u}n$, as 'onion', and as 'vital air'. Cf. verses 89, 90. The first interpretation is:—]

I locked the doors and windows of my body.

I seized the thief of my onions, and called for help.

I bound him tightly in the closet of my heart,

And with the whip of the pranava did I flay him.

[The second, esoteric, interpretation is as follows:—]

I locked the doors and windows of my body.

I seized the thief of my vital airs, and controlled my breath.

I bound him tightly in the closet of my heart, And with the whip of the praṇava did I flay him.

It is necessary to explain that the expression dam dyun", to give breath, is used in three senses. It may mean 'to give breath' (e.g. to a bellows), as in the preceding verse. Or it may mean 'to give forth breath', i.e. 'to cry out'. Or it may mean—also as in the preceding verse—'to control the breath' by the yōga exercise called prāṇāyāma (see Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 23, and Vocabulary, s.v. nāḍi). The thief of the vital airs is the worldly temptations that interfere with their proper control.

The pranava is the mystic syllable $\bar{o}\dot{m}$, regarding which see verses 15, 33, and 34.

102. I, Lallā, went forth in the hope of (blooming like) a cotton-flower.

Many a kick did the cleaner and the carder give me.

Gossamer made from me did the spinning woman lift from the wheel,

And a hanging kick did I receive in the weaver's work-room.

103. When the washerman dashed me (or turned me over) on the washing-stone,

He rubbed me much with fuller's earth and soap.

When the tailor worked his scissors on me, piece by piece,

Then did I, Lallā, obtain the way of the Supreme.

These two verses form another of Lalla's hard sayings which Kāshmīrīs of the present day do not profess to be able to explain. The general meaning is clear enough. Lallā describes her progress to true knowledge through the metaphor of a cotton-pod. The cotton is first roughly treated by the cleaner and the carder. It is next spun into fine thread, and then hung up in misery as the warp on a weaver's loom. The finished cloth is then dashed by the washerman on his stone, and otherwise severely treated in order to whiten it; and, finally, the tailor cuts it up and makes out of it a finished garment. The various stages towards the attainment of knowledge are thus metaphorically indicated, but the explanation of each separate metaphor is unknown. Very possibly, each stage in the manufacture of the cloth represents, not a stage in a single life, but a separate existence in Lalla's progress from birth to birth.

The word lath, occurring twice in verse 102, means 'a kick', and is used in the sense of general violent treatment—once under the cotton-carder's bow, and again when the threads are hung up and strained tight in the loom. The word t^ay has two meanings. In the first place, it indicates a woman whose profession it is to spin a particular kind of gossamer thread; and in the second place, it indicates the particular thread itself. The being drawn out to this extreme fineness is one of the hardships to which the cotton is subjected.

The procedure of an Indian washerman is well known. He has, half submerged on the bank of a pond or river, a large flat stone. On this he dashes with great force the garment to be washed, which has been previously soaked in soap and water. It is a most effective method of driving out all dirt, and also, incidentally, of ruining the texture of the cloth.

I hoped not in it for a moment, I trusted it not by a hair.

Still I, Lalla, drank the wine of mine own sayings.

Yet, then did I seize an inner darkness and bring it down,

And tear it, and cut it to pieces.

Another hard saying, the full meaning of which is doubtful. Apparently it means that when Lalla first began to utter her sayings, as she calls her verses and as they are still called (Lallā-vākyāni), though they intoxicated her like wine, she had no conception that they would have any permanent effect upon her. Yet she found that by their help she became enabled to dissipate the inner darkness of her soul. Or perhaps 'it' is the vanities of the world. Feeling distrustful and fearful of the dark mysterious world of phenomena, she drank the wine of her verses to give herself courage to fight against it, and thus was emboldened to knock down its phantasmagoria.

And soothe his pain with the Love of God.

Crying 'It is I, Lallā—it is I, Lallā', the Beloved I awakened.

The end of moonlight is the early dawn,—hence the conclusion of the night of ignorance referred to in the preceding verse. The mad one is the mind intoxicated and maddened by worldly illusion. The Beloved whom Lallā awoke was her own Self, which she roused to the knowledge of its identity with the Supreme Self. The ten are the five organs of sense and the five organs of action—the chief impediments to the acceptance of the Great Truth. See Vocabulary, s. v. yund^u. Dah, ten, also means 'a lake'. Thus, by a paronomasia, the last line may also be translated, 'I became one with him, and my mind lost its defilement, as in a lake (of crystal-clear water).'

That which Nārāyaṇa wrote for thee in the line of fate,

That, Good Sir! none can reverse for thee.

The rope of sand is the belief in formal religion and the desire for worldly joys. The accomplishment of such desires is beyond the reach of any man. He can only attain to that which is written by Nārāyaṇa, i.e. God, as his fate. No effort of his will can alter that.

The conclusion of the whole matter is that the only method of escaping fate is to effect the union of the Self with the Supreme.

There are various interpretations of some of the words in this verse. Ami rakhi, by means of this (weak) line, i. e. the rope of sand, may also be translated 'on this (thin) line', i. e. along the narrow track, or towing-path, on the bank of a river. Another reading is ami rati, by grasping it, sc. the rope of sand. The word hamāli, O Burden-bearer, may also be read as ha māli, O Father, here a polite form of address, equivalent to 'Good Sir'. A 'burden-bearer' is a labouring man accustomed to lifting heavy weights, and, as such, would be employed on the heavy work of pulling a tow-rope. This method of taking a ship up-stream is a common sight on Kashmīr rivers.

The sling of the load of candy hath become loose upon my (shoulder).

Crooked for me hath become my day's work. How can I succeed?

The words of my teacher have fallen upon me like a blister of loss.

My flock hath lost its shepherd. How can I succeed?

Another of Lalla's hard sayings. Its meaning is apparently as follows:—

Like Christian in The Pilgrim's Progress, she has been bearing on her back a burden of worldly illusions and pleasures, compared to a load of sugar-candy, and the knot of the porter's sling that supports it has become loose and galls her. In other words, she has found that such a burden produces only toil and pain. Her wasted life in this workaday world has become a weariness, and she is in despair.

She has recourse to her Gurn, or spiritual teacher. His words cause her intolerable pain—a pain such as that experienced by the loss of some loved object (the worldly illusion which she must abandon), and she learns that the whole flock of factors that make up her sentient existence have lost their proper ruler, the mind; for it is steeped in ignorance of Self.

Searching and seeking came I from my inner soul into the moonlight.

Searching and seeking came I to know that like are joined to like.

This All is only Thou, O Nārāyaṇa, only Thou. Only Thou. What are all these Thy sports?

For the comparison of the moonlight to true knowledge, see the Vocabulary, s. v. som.

'Like joined to like': i.e. the Self is the same as the Supreme Self, and must become absorbed in it.

Nārāyaṇa is generally the name for the Supreme employed by Vaiṣṇavas. Here it is employed by the Saiva Lallā. The expression 'sport' is a well-known technical term for the changes apparently undergone by the Deity, by which He manifests Himself in creation.

Lallā asks, What are these manifestations? The answer, of course, being that they are all unreal illusion.

APPENDIX I

VERSES BY LALLĀ IN KNOWLES'S DICTIONARY OF KASHMIRI PROVERBS

Mr. Hinton Knowles's valuable Dictionary of Kashmiri Proverbs and Sayings (Bombay, 1885) contains a number of verses attributed to Lallā. With Mr. Knowles's kind permission, I have excerpted them and give them in the following appendix. The spelling of the Kāshmīrī quotations has necessarily been changed to agree with the system of transliteration adopted for the preceding pages, and here and there I have had occasion to modify the translations. But, save for a few verbal alterations, Mr. Knowles's valuable notes have been left untouched.

These verses are quoted by the abbreviation K. Pr. with the number of the page of the original work. [G. A. G.]

LALLA'S VERSES IN KNOWLES'S DICTIONARY 121

A saying of Lal Dĕd, who was a very holy Hindū woman.

The Kashmiri Hindu belief is that during the sixth month after death the spirit of the deceased has to cross the waters of the Vaitarani; but it is impossible to get to the other side of the river except by special means, as the waters are so deep and stormy and the opposing powers, prêta, yamadut, matsya, and kūrma are so strong. Accordingly about this time the bereaved relations call the family Brāhman, who repeats to them the portions appointed to be read on this occasion. Among other things the departed spirit is represented as standing on the brink of the river and crying 'Where is my father? Where is my mother? Where are my relations and my friends? Is there no one to help me over this river?" This is sometimes recited with much feeling, and great are the lamentations of the bereaved, who now with sobs and tears present a little boat and paddle, made of gold, or silver, or copper, according to their position, to the Brāhman; and in the boat they place ghi, milk, butter, and rice. The boat is for the conveyance of the spirit across Vaitarani, and the provisions are for the appearement of the contrary powers, prêta, matsya, and others, who will try to turn back the boat, but who on having these, ghi and rice, &c., thrown to them, will at once depart their own way.

The Hindus believe that if this ceremony is performed in a right manner, a boat will be at once present upon the waters, close to that portion of the bank of the river, where the spirit is waiting and praying for it, and that the spirit getting into it will be safely conveyed to the opposite side. The gift-boat, however, is taken home by the Brāhman, and generally turned into money as soon as possible.

At the moment of death amongst other things a paisa is placed within the mouth of the corpse, wherewith to pay the ferry.

This saying has its original in a story well known in Kashmīr. Lal Děd, whose name has been mentioned before, used to peregrinate in an almost nude condition, and was constantly saying that 'He only was a man, who feared God, and there were very few such men about.'

One day Shāh Hamadān, after whom the famous mosque in Srīnagar is called, met her, and she at once ran away. This was a strange thing for Lal Děd to do; but it was soon explained. 'I have seen a man', she said, to the astonished baniyā, into whose shop she had fled for refuge. The baniyā, however, turned her out. Then Lal Děd rushed to the baker's house and jumped into the oven, which at that time was fully heated for baking the bread. When the baker saw this he fell down in a swoon, thinking that, for certain, the king would hear of this and punish him. However, there was no need to fear, as Lal Děd presently appeared from the mouth of the oven clad in clothes of gold, and hastened after Shāh Hamadān. Cf. Panjāb Notes and Queries, ii, 743.

'Which was the greatest of all lights?' 'Which was the most famous of all pilgrimages?' 'Which was the best of all relations?' 'Which was the best of all manner of ease?' Lal was the first to reply:—

'There is no light like that of the sun; There is no pilgrimage like Gangā; There is no relation like a brother; There is no ease like that of a wife.'

But Sĕd did not quite agree. 'No', said he-

'There is no light like that of the eyes;
There is no pilgrimage like that of the knees;
There is no relation like one's pocket;
There is no ease like that of a blanket.'

Then Lal Děd, determining not to be outwitted by her master, again replied:—

'There is no light like that of the knowledge of God;

There is no pilgrimage like that of an ardent love;

There is no relation to be compared with the Deity;

There is no ease like that got from the fear of God.'

I have seen something like a part of the above lines in the Rev. C. Swynnerton's Adventures of Rājā Rasālū, but not having the book at hand I cannot say in what connexion they occur there.¹

Gangā or Gangābal is one of the great Hindu places of pilgrimage. Hither go all those Pandits, who have had relations die during the year, carrying some small bones, which they had picked from the ashes at the time of the burning of the dead bodies. These bones are thrown into the sacred waters of Gangābal with money and sweetmeats. The pilgrimage takes place about the 8th day of the Hindu month Bādarpět (August 20th cir.). Cf. Vigne's Travels in Kashmīr, &c., vol. ii, pp. 151, 152.

APPENDIX II

ON LALLA'S LANGUAGE

[By SIR GEORGE GRIERSON.]

LALLA lived in the fourteenth century. These songs have been handed down by word of mouth, and it has been pointed out in the Introduction how in the course of centuries, as the colloquial language changed, the language in which they were originally composed insensibly changed too.1 We cannot therefore be surprised at finding that the verses as here published are, on the whole, in the Kashmiri spoken at the present day. A certain number of archaic forms have. however, survived; some, on account of their very strangeness, which marked them as old-fashioned, and others, because the language of poetry, with its unvarying laws of metre, always changes more slowly than does that of colloquial speech. In this latter respect the compositions of Lalla are not alone in Kashmir, and all the poetry of her country, even that written in the last century, contains many archaic forms. We therefore find scattered through these verses several examples of words and of idioms which throw light on the history of the Kāshmīrī language, and no apology is needed for drawing attention to the more important. It should be understood that these examples as quoted do not illustrate the general language of the songs, which is much more modern than would be gathered from the mere perusal of this Appendix. Throughout it is assumed that the reader has an elementary acquaintance with modern Kāshmīrī.

Metrical requirements often demand a long syllable at the end of a line, and we frequently find in this position a long, where the modern language would employ a short, vowel. I have noted all these instances because a number of cases of apparent lengthening also occurs when the vowel is not final in a line, and is not required by the metre to be long. We are therefore not justified in assuming that such long vowels at the end of a line have been lengthened merely for the sake of metre.

Vocabulary.—There are a few words of which the meaning is doubtful, and two or three of which the meaning is altogether unknown at the present day. Such are \(\bar{li} \dam^i \) (81) and (all in 84-5) \(\bar{huda-hudaney}, \(raza-dane, \) and \(abakh. \) The first is said to mean 'sports' (cf. Skr. \(bla \bar{li} \)), but I have found no tradition as to the meaning of the others. I may note here that in other K\(\bar{a} \)shm\(\bar{n} \)r\(\bar{i} \) iterature which, like Lall\(\bar{a} \)'s songs, is preserved by memory and not in writing, such words are not uncommon, and that the reciters, and, when consulted, even Pandits, are never ashamed to confess ignorance of their meaning. As to the genuineness of these unknown words, and as to the general correctness of texts so preserved, the reader is referred to the remarks on pp. 3 ff. of the Introduction.

In this connexion we may note a termination $-w\delta n^u$, forming nouns of agency or possession, which I have not noted in the modern language. It occurs in the words $shruta-w\delta n^u$, a heaver; $brama-w\delta n^u$, a wanderer; $pruthi-w\delta n^u$, of, or belonging to, the earth; and $sh\bar{u}ba-w\delta n^u$, beautiful. It runs parallel with the modern termination $-w\delta l^u$ (= Hindī $-w\bar{u}l\bar{u}$), but I am inclined to look upon it rather as directly derived from the Sanskrit termination $-v\bar{u}n$, perhaps influenced as to its form by the analogy of $-w\delta l^u$. Cf. Skr. $\delta ruta-v\bar{u}n$, $bhrama-v\bar{u}n$, $prthv\bar{\imath}-m\bar{u}n$, and $\delta\bar{o}bh\bar{u}-v\bar{u}n$.

Occasionally we find tatsama forms employed where the modern language employs semi-tatsamas. Thus, we have suān (mod. shrān), bathing; sūrya (mod. sirĕ), the sun; sarwa (mod. soru), all. We may note that, for this last word, the Hindī form sab also occurs. So, we have pyuwum (for piwum), compared with Hindī piyā, but Modern Kāshmīrī cyōm, I drank; dyūkhukh (for dēkhukh), compared with H. dēkhā, but Mod. K. dyūṭhukh (for dēṭhukh), saw thee; kiyĕm, compared with H. kiyā, but Mod. K. karĕm, I made (f. pl. object).

The ordinary word for the numeral 'one' is akh or ok^u , but Lallā also has $y\bar{e}k^u$, which may be compared with the Hindī $\bar{e}k$.

Other miscellaneous instances of unusual vocabulary are $vyuh^u$ (Mod. vih), appearance; $yund^u$, an organ (indriya); $kond^u$, some one, any one (in pl. ag. $kand\check{e}v$); $ky\bar{o}h$ or $ky\bar{a}wu$ (Mod. $ky\bar{a}h$), or, as well as; $k\bar{o}$ -zana or $k\bar{o}$ -zana $\tilde{n}i$, by what means?; $push\check{e}run$ (Mod. $push\check{e}run$), to make over; $n\bar{a}$, $n\bar{o}$ (Mod. na), not; and mau or $m\bar{o}$ (Mod. ma), prohibitive particle.

Phonetics.—Vowels.—As in Modern Kāshmīrī, a following c, ch, or sh becomes č, though as often as not written a. No examples have been found of the written change after c, but for ch we have lachě, for lacha, the oblique form singular of lach, a hundred thousand, and there are numerous examples of the change after sh, of which shěnkar, for shankar, Śańkara, will suffice. It is, of course, a commonplace of Kāshmīrī that i and č are interchangeable, and that the ordinary speaker is unable to distinguish between the two sounds. It thus follows that after ch, a, č, and i are all written interchangeably for the same sound—č. Thus, bŏchi-sūty, (dying) of hunger, is indifferently written with bŏcha, bŏchě, or bŏchi. In verse 83, we have bŏcha, although the sound of bŏchi is certainly intended.

Similarly in the modern language interchange of \bar{e} and $\bar{\imath}$ is equally universal. Lall goes further, in that she has both $g\bar{e}h$ and gih, a house; and $d\bar{e}h$ and dih, the body. We may judge from this that she pronounced $g\bar{e}h$ as $g\check{e}h$, and $d\bar{e}h$ as $d\check{e}h$.

In the modern language ai (which is interchangeable with \ddot{o}) generally becomes \ddot{u} when followed by u-mātrā, and becomes \ddot{u} when followed by i-mātrā or \ddot{u} -mātrā. Thus, the base yait-, or $y\ddot{o}t$ -, as much (as), has its nominative singular masculine $y\bar{u}t^u$, its nominative plural masculine $y\bar{u}t^i$, and its nominative singular feminine $y\bar{u}t^{\ddot{u}}$. Similarly, there is a modern Kāshmīrī word $p\bar{u}r^u$, a foot, for which Lallā gives the plural ablative as pairiv, showing that the base of the word is pair. No instance occurs of the form which she would give to the nominative singular of this word, but she would probably have used pairu, for, in the place of the modern Kāshmīrī $y\bar{u}t^u$, she uses yaitu, and, in the place of modern $k\bar{u}t^i$ (nom. pl. masc.), how many?, she has $kait^i$. In other words, in Lallā's time, ai preserved its sound before u-mātrā and i-mātrā, and probably also before \bar{u} -mātrā, and the epenthetic change to \bar{u} and \bar{u} seems to have come into the language since her days. This is borne out by the very fluctuating methods employed in indicating these changes in writing at the present time.

Consonants.—As in the modern language, there are no sonant aspirates. They are occasionally written in tatsamas, but even here there is no consistency, and when a sonant aspirate is written we may be sure that the fact is of no importance. On the other hand, we must not reject the possibility that the customary omission of the aspiration of sonant aspirates is not original, but has been introduced during the process of handing down the text by word of mouth. In other words, we can judge nothing from the presence or the omission of the aspiration.

We are, however, on surer ground when we approach the second great law of Kāshmīrī pronunciation—that a final surd is always aspirated. These are regularly aspirated throughout the whole text, and this is original, and is not due to modern pronunciation. Thus in verse 5, $r\bar{a}th$, night, rhymes with $n\bar{a}th$, a lord. Now, the th of $n\bar{a}th$ is original, and owes nothing to the special Kāshmīrī rule, but the original form of $r\bar{a}th$ is $r\bar{a}t$, and the t has been aspirated under the special rule. The fact that $r\bar{a}t$ would not rhyme with $n\bar{a}th$ shows that Lallā pronounced the word as $r\bar{a}th$, and that consequently she did aspirate her final surds.

Modern Kāshmīrī has a very weak feeling of the difference between cerebrals and often interchanges them, and also commonly, in village dialect, interchanges a cerebral t or d with a dental r. So, Lallā has $d\ddot{o}d^i$, for modern $d\ddot{o}d^i$, thoroughly, continually (compare Sanskrit dārḍhya-); dēshun or dēshun, to see (*dṛṣyati); cēdun or cērun, to mount; gaṭun or garun, to form; hyuḍu (mod. hyuru), the gullet; mūḍun or mūrun, to triturate; paḍun or parun to recite; zūḍu or zūru, bad habits.

Here also we may draw attention to the well-known fact that Kāshmīrī has no cerebral n. A dental n is always substituted for it. Thus, Skr. $k\bar{a}na$, one-eyed, is represented by Ksh. $k\delta n^n$. This n, representing an original n, Lallā has changed to a dental r in the form $k\delta r^n$. Finally, in this connexion, we have a modern dental ℓ represented by Lallā's dental r in her $ch\bar{o}r$, for $ch\bar{u}\ell$, a waterfall.

The modern language shows a tendency to insert a w before a long \bar{a} in the first syllable of a word. So, Lallā has $gw\bar{a}h$ (modern $g\bar{a}h$), illumination; $g\bar{a}run$ or $gw\bar{a}run$, to search; and $s\bar{a}s$ or $sw\bar{a}s$, ashes.

We have interchange of d and z in wudun or wuzun, to awake from sleep.¹

Declension.—Substantires and Adjectives.—Kāshmīrī has four declensions, viz. (1) a masculine a-declension; (2) a masculine i-declension; (3) a feminine i-declension; and (4) a feminine a-declension. This is the general explanation of the forms involved, and is a good representation of the present state of affairs, but from the point of view of origin it is not quite accurate. The true grouping would be to class the second and third declensions as ka-suffix-declensions, and the first and fourth as non-ka-suffix declensions. All nouns in the first and second declensions are masculine, and all those in the third and fourth are feminine. Some of the nouns of the fourth declension have really i-bases, and what distinguishes them from nouns of the third declension is not that they follow an a-declension—which they do not—but that they had no original ka-suffix.

For the sake of simplicity, I take the non-ka-suffix nouns first, and begin with the first, or masculine, declension. This is quite correctly described as an a-declension. Even the few surviving i- and u-bases follow it. Thus, the word $g\ddot{o}s^u$, a grass-seller, follows this declension, although it must be referred to a Sanskrit i-base $*gh\ddot{a}sin$ -. The typical declension in the modern language is as follows:—

Singular.		Plural.
Nom.	tūr, a thief.	₺ūr.
Dat.	tsūras.	taran.
Instr. and Ag.	($b\bar{u}r^i$), $b\bar{u}ran$.	tū, av.
Abl.	(tūri), tūra.	₺ūrav.

It will be observed that, as in Prakrit, the dative is represented by the old genitive (cōrasya, cōrassa; cōrāṇām, cōrāṇa). The forms in brackets given for the instr. and abl. singular are nowadays described as 'old forms' and occur only in special words and idioms. The i-termination is to be referred to the Prakrit-hi. The instrumental and agent case is everywhere only a special form of the case which I call the ablative. The latter is used in many senses, and its use closely corresponds to that of the Latin ablative. Like that, it is frequently governed by a postposition corresponding to the Latin preposition. In such circumstances it corresponds to the general oblique case of Hindi nouns, and may, itself, also be called the 'oblique case', as is occasionally done in these pages.

In the old Apabhranisa dialect current in Kashmīr before the birth of Kāshmīrī the nominative and accusative singular of a-bases, masculine and neuter, ended in -u. Thus, in the first two verses of the ancient Kashmīr Apabhranisa work entitled the Mahārtha-prakāša, we have paru for param; ghasmaru for ghasmarah; bhairu for bhairavah; and cakku for cakram. This termination survived into Lallā's time, for she has paramu for paramah in v. 77.

We have interesting survivals of the oldest form of the modern dative singular. In v. 22, Lallā treats the word $atm\bar{a}$, self, as an a-base, and gives it a genitive $\bar{a}tm\bar{a}s\bar{e}$ (m. c. for $\bar{a}tm\bar{a}s\bar{e}$), which I explain as a contraction of $\bar{a}tmassa$, with a survival of the original y of $\bar{a}tmassa$,—Kāshmīrī pronunciation $*\bar{a}tm\bar{a}s\bar{e}$,—in the final i; or possibly she may have unconsciously endeavoured to reproduce a quasi-Sanskrit *ātmāsya. So, again, she has dēwas for Prakrit dēvassa, of a god, in 33, in which, according to the rule in all the Dardic languages, a vowel is not lengthened in compensation for the simplification of a consonantal group.

In the modern language the ablative generally ends in a short -a—a shortening of one of the Prakrit terminations $-\bar{a}\bar{o}$, \bar{a} , or of the Apabhramśa -ahu. Lallā occasionally has ablatives ending in long \bar{a} , as in $\bar{o}s\bar{a}$ and $s\bar{a}s\bar{a}$ in 18. Other examples are $srat\bar{a}$ (1) and $rimarsh\bar{a}$ (16), but these occur at the end of a line, and the vowel may have been lengthened for the sake of rhyme.

The instrumental-agent in i and the ablative in i may be considered together. They are used in various senses. A locative is very common. For the pure instrumental, we have $abhy\ddot{o}s^i$ in verse 1. Locatives are $gag\dot{a}n^i$, in the sky (26); mani, in the mind (18, 45); and $\dot{a}nt^i$ (54) or $\dot{a}ntih^i$ (33, 37, &c.), in the end. In the last example, the original hi-termination has survived. Lallā sometimes substitutes \bar{e} for the final i, as in $ath\bar{e}$, in the hand (10). In other cases the words occur at the end of a line, so that it is possible that the \bar{e} is here only i lengthened for the sake of metre. They are $ath\bar{e}$ (98); $gar\bar{e}$, in the house (3, 34); $m\bar{a}w\bar{a}s\bar{e}$, on the day of the new moon (22). This termination i of the ablative occurs in all declinations, and we shall see that Lallā's change of the i to \bar{e} is very common.

In the modern language the instrumental-ablative plural ends in -av, also written -au. Perhaps -au would be the best representation of the true sound. We are at once reminded of the Prakrit termination $-a\bar{o}$, $-\bar{a}u$, Apabhramśa $-ah\tilde{u}$, of the ablative plural. In one place (53) Lallā has garu, which is to be translated as the locative plural of gara, a house. Its origin is evidently the same as that of the form with -av.

The other non-ka-declension is the fourth, and includes all the feminine nouns of this class. It has two divisions, viz. u-bases and i-bases. As an example of the modern declension of an a-base, we will take $m\bar{a}l$ (Skr. $m\bar{a}l\bar{a}$), a garland.

Singular.		Plural.
Nom.	$mar{a}l$.	māla.
Dat.	māli.	mālan.
InstrAbl	. māli.	mālav (mālau).

Which may be compared with the following Prakrit forms:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	mālā.	mālāō.
Gen.	mālāē, mālāi.	mālāņa.
Abl.	mālāi, Ap. mālahe.	mālāu, Ap. mālahu.

It will be observed that Kāshmīrī has throughout lost the distinguishing termination -ā of the feminine. So also in Apabhramśa (Hc. iv, 330. Cf. Pischel, § 100).

Besides the above, Lallā has other forms. For the dative singular, she has $d\bar{a}\ell$ (74), in the flood, and $vat\bar{e}$ (98), on a road. Numerous other instances of datives or agents singular in $-\bar{e}$ occur at the end of a line, such as $h\bar{a}l\bar{e}$ (4), from $h\bar{a}l$, a bellows-pipe; $Lal\bar{e}$ (76), by Lallā; $prah\bar{e}$ (105), by love; $tan\bar{e}$ (76), to the body (Pr. $tan\bar{u}\bar{e}$); $vat\bar{e}$ (98), on the road; $vibh\bar{e}$ (45), with a wish $(icch\bar{a})$; $z\bar{u}n\bar{e}$ (9), to the moonlight $(jv\bar{v}lsn\bar{u}y\bar{a}h,jonh\bar{u}\bar{e})$.

The second division, consisting of nouns with i-bases, is the so-called irregular fourth declension. In the nominative singular the termination -i of the bases is dropped, and the word is otherwise unchanged. But in the other cases, before the old vowel terminations, the -i- with the following vowel becomes \ddot{u} -mātrā. This \ddot{u} -mātrā, according to the usual Kāshmīrī phonetic rules, has certain epenthetic effects on the preceding vowel and consonant, for which see the usual grammars. The word $h\bar{u}n$ (Skr. $h\bar{u}ni$ -), loss, is therefore thus declined:—

Singular.		Plural
Nom.	hān.	höñü.
Dat.	höñü.	höñ ^ü n
Instr-Abl.	höñü.	höñ ^ü v

The corresponding Prakrit declension would be:-

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	hāṇī.	hāṇīō, Ap. hāṇiu.
Gen.	hāņīi.	hāṇīṇa.
Abl.	hānīi.	hāṇīu, Ap . hāṇih \tilde{u} .

As modern Kāshmīrī \ddot{u} -mātrā represents an original \check{t} , it is not surprising that Lallā should use the older form $d\ddot{o}\tilde{n}i$, as the agent case of $d\bar{a}n$, a stream (39, 40), instead of the modern $d\ddot{o}\tilde{n}^{\ddot{u}}$.

Turning now to the ka-declensions, these are the second and the third. The second declension consists only of masculine nouns, and the third only of feminine.

In the case of an u-base, the original termination of the base, together with the ka-suffix, becomes -aku-, and in the case of an i-base it becomes -ika-. I have not yet noted any instance in Kāshmīrī of the ka-suffix added to a u-base.

In the second declension, an a-base is thus declined in the modern language. The noun selected is $w\tilde{a}dur^{u}$, a monkey:—

Singular.		Plural.
Nom.	vädur", vädur.	wādar.
Dat.	wāduras.	wādaran.
Abl.	wādara.	wādarav.

The corresponding Prakrit forms would be:-

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	vāņaraō.	vāņaraā.
Gen.	vāņaraassa.	rāņaraāņa.
Abl.	vānaraāō, vānaraā.	rānaraāō.

It will be observed that, except in the nominative singular, the Kāshmīrī declension has become exactly the same as in the first—non-ka-—declension. The nominative singular is really $m\tilde{a}dar^u$, but, as usual, the final u-mātrā epenthetically affects the preceding a, and the word becomes $m\tilde{a}dor^u$ or $m\tilde{a}dur^u$. As u-mātrā is not itself sounded, this is commonly written $m\tilde{a}dur$, and words of this group are treated by Kāshmīrī grammarians as exceptional words of the first declension.

For a ka-noun with an i-base, we have as an example the word $host^u$, an elephant. The modern base of this word is hast-, but, in the nominative singular, the a has become o under the influence of the following u-mātrā. It is thus declined:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	$host^u$.	häst ⁱ .
Dat.	hastis.	hastěn (for hastyan).
InstrAg.	$h\dot{a}st^{m{i}}.$) Lastyn (Com Lastuan)
Abl.	hasti.	} hastĕv (for hastyay).

The word hostⁿ represents an earlier hastikah, and this would be declined as follows in Prakrit:—

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	hatthiō, Ap. hatthiu.	hatthiā.
Gen.	hatthiassa.	hatthiāņa.
Abl.	halthiāhi, Ap, hatthiahe.	hatthiāu, Ap, hatthiahu.

The Kāshmīrī word host^u is not a tatsama. In Kāshmīrī a Prakrit tth is not uncommonly represented by st. E.g. Skr. sárthakaḥ, Pr. satthaō, Māgadhī Pr. śastaē, Ksh. sost^u, possessed of.

It is a noteworthy fact that while some Kāshmīrī a-bases with the ka-suffix are declined like $w\tilde{a}dur^u$, the great majority have changed their base-forms, and are treated as if they were i-bases. For instance, the word gur^u , a horse (sg. dat. guris, abl. guri, and so on) follows $host^u$, an i-base, although the Sanskrit original is $gh\bar{o}takah$, Pr. $gh\bar{o}da\bar{o}$, which is an a-base. This peculiarity certainly goes back as far as Lallā's time. She gives us $h\hat{a}t^i$ (32) as the plural nominative of hot^u (hatakah), struck, and $m\tilde{o}kh^at^i$ (6), the plural nominative of $m\tilde{o}kh^ot^u$ (muktakah), released, and so many others. In one case she hesitates between the two forms. She takes the word $makor^u$ or $makur^u$, a mirror, and gives its dative singular as makuras (a-base) in 31, and as makaris (i-base) in 18.

I suggest that the origin of the treatment of a-bases as if they were i-bases is of a complex character. In the first place, when the intervocalic k of the ka-suffix is elided, a y may or may not be substituted for it. If no y is inserted, the word remains an a-base, and there is an end of the matter. But if a y is inserted, a word such as $gh\bar{o}takah$ becomes $gh\bar{o}day\bar{o}$, from which the transition to *guriu, gur^u is easy. Then, again, the fact of the analogy of feminine ka-bases must be taken into account. Practically all these end in -ika-, and in Kāshmīrī must be treated as i-bases. Finally, we know that in dialectic Prakrit -ika- was sometimes substituted for -aka-(Pischel, § 598). I believe that all these three causes contributed to the change of a-bases to i-bases in Kāshmīrī.

We have seen that in modern Kāshmīrī the sg. abl. of an i-base in this declension ends in -i, as in hasti. Lallā occasionally makes it end in $-\bar{e}$, and this is quite in accordance with the Prakrit form. Thus, from $d\bar{u}r^{\mu}$, far, she has $d\bar{u}r\bar{e}$ (36), for modern $d\bar{u}ri$; and from mor^{μ} , a hut, she has $mar\bar{e}$ (K. Pr. 57), for mod. mari. The latter word occurs at the end of a line, and the termination may be due to metrical exigencies.

The pl. nom. ends in i, as in $h\dot{a}st^i$. Lallā on three occasions lengthens this i, when at the end of a line, to i or \tilde{c} , viz. in $hand\bar{c}$, rams (77); $nal\bar{c}$, cowry-shells (81); and $sam\tilde{c}$, alike (16).

She makes the plural ablative end in -iv in pairiv, from $p\bar{n}i^n$, a foot (38). This, however, is little more than a matter of spelling.

The third, or feminine ka-declension appears in the following form in the modern language. The word taken as an example is gur^u a mare.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	gur^{ii} .	gurĕ (for gurya).
Dat.	gurĕ (for gurya).	gurën (for guryan).
InstrAbl.		gurëv (for guryau).

The corresponding Prakrit forms would be:-

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	ghōḍiā.	ghōḍiā.
Gen.	ghōḍiāē, ghōḍiāi.	ghōḍiāṇa.
Abl.	ghōḍiāē, Ap. ghōḍiahe.	ghōḍiāu, Ap. ghōḍiahu.

As \check{e} and i are interchangeable in Kāshmīrī, the difference between the singular dative and ablative is only one of spelling, and as a matter of custom the two forms are often interchanged even by the most careful writers. The spelling given here is that of Iśvara-kaula.

It should be remembered that \ddot{u} -mātrā in Kāshmīrī represents an original \tilde{t} , so that the older form of $gur^{\dot{u}}$ would be $gur\tilde{t}$. So Lallā has hishi for $hish^{\dot{u}}$, like, in 10 and 77; $m\ddot{o}ji$ (97, end of line), for $m\ddot{o}j^{\dot{u}}$, a mother; $push\ddot{o}\bar{n}i$ (39, 49, end of line), for $push\ddot{o}\bar{n}i$, a florist; $thaj\bar{i}$ (33, end of line), for $th\ddot{u}j\ddot{u}$, a shrine.

So, for the singular dative, we have wahawañi, for wahawañi, flowing (57, end of line).

The Genitive Case.—Lallā's use of the genitive differs somewhat from that customary in modern Kāshmīrī. Nowadays there are three suffixes of the genitive, with sharply distinguished functions. These are $-nk^n$, $-nn^n$, and $-hond^n$. The suffix $-nk^n$ is used with all singular masculine nouns without life. In this case Lallā follows the modern custom.

The suffix $-un^u$ (fem. $-\ddot{u}\tilde{n}^u$) is used only with singular male proper names, as in $r\bar{a}mun^u$, of Rāma. Lallā uses it with other nouns also, as in $sams\bar{a}run^u$, of the universe (6); $maranu\bar{n}^u$ (fem.), of dying (73-6); $puhun^u$, of the month of Pauṣa (83); $huda-hudu\bar{n}^u$ (84) (fem.), of unknown meaning; and $karmu\bar{n}^u$ (fem.), of fate (107).

In the modern language -hondu is used: --

- (1) With all feminine nouns, singular or plural.
- (2) With all masculine plural nouns.
- (3) With all animate masculine singular nouns, except proper names.

It governs the dative case, and as the dative singular of all masculine nouns ends in s, we get forms such as $b\bar{u}ras-hond^u$, of the thief; $hastis-hond^u$, of the elephant. In such cases, the h of $-hond^u$ is dropped after the s, and the form for animate masculine singular nouns becomes as in $b\bar{u}ra-sond^u$, $hast^i-sond^u$. In two passages (88, K. Pr. 57) Lallā makes $-hond^u$ govern the ablative, in $l\bar{u}ka-hond^u$, not $l\bar{u}ka-sond^u$, of people. Possibly this is for $l\bar{u}kan-hond^u$, in the plural, with the u elided. The word $l\bar{u}k$ - is employed both in the singular and in the plural to mean 'people'.

Adjectives.—Only the numerals call for remarks. The word for 'three' is tr^ah , instead of the modern $tr\check{e}h$ or trih. It is treated as a singular, with an ablative trayi, in verse 50, as compared with the modern ablative plural $tr\check{e}yav$. For 'five', besides the modern $p\bar{a}nts$, we have the tatsama panca (79). Other numerals, e.g. $sh\check{e}h$, six, are treated as plurals. Cf. pl. dat. $sh\check{e}n$ (13).

Pronouns.—The pronoun of the first person calls for no remarks. For the second person, the singular dative is not only the modern $\delta \tilde{e}$, but also (13) $t \delta y \tilde{e}$, a form not used in modern Kāshmīrī. In the modern language, whenever the pronoun of the second person appears in a sentence, it must always also appear attached to the verb, as a pronominal suffix. For instance, we must say $\delta \tilde{e} \ golu-lh$, not $\delta \tilde{e} \ gol^u$, destroyed by thee, i.e. thou destroyedst. But in one case (64), Lallā omits the suffix and has $\delta \tilde{e} \ gol^u$.

The modern word for 'this' is y/h. Lallā also has an older form yuh^u (for yih^u) (1, 20, 58), with a feminine y/ha (54).

The modern nominative masculine of the relative pronoun yih is yus, who. That this is derived from an older yis^u is shown by Lallā's yus^u (i.e. yis^u) (20, 24, &c.). The feminine is $y\breve{v}sa$ (52), mod. $y\breve{v}ssa$.

In addition to the usual indefinite pronoun $k\tilde{e}h$, some one, any one, Lallā has (55) a plural agent $kaud\tilde{e}v$, from which we can deduce a nominative singular $koud^u$, unknown to the modern language.

Under the head of phonetics, attention has been called to the form yaitu, for modern $y\bar{u}t^u$, as much as.

Conjugation.—In the modern language the conjunctive participle ends in -it(h), derived from the Sanskrit -tya, as in $m\ddot{o}rit(h)$, having killed, corresponding to a quasi-Sanskrit * $m\ddot{a}ritya$. In Kāshmīrī poetry and in village talk this form is sometimes used as a past participle. Thus, in the Śivapariṇaya, 1630, we have chus bõh khasith, I am ascended, lit. I am having ascended. In two passages Lallā gives this participle an older form, more nearly approaching the original. In 27, she has $kh\dot{a}s^it^i$, having ascended, and in the same verse she has $l\dot{a}s^it^i$ (in the sense of the past participle), they lived long. In the modern language, the word $k\breve{e}th$ is often pleonastically added, as in dith keth, having given; heth keth, having taken. In the 12th verse, Lalla gives instead of these forms dith karith and heth karith, which show the origin of this keth. In these Dardic languages the elision of a medial single r is common. Karith is itself the conjunctive participle of karun, to do, and its use is exactly paralleled by the Hinda use of kar-ke added pleonastically to a conjunctive participle in that language.

The present participle in the modern language ends in $-\bar{a}n$, as in $kar\bar{a}n$, doing; but in poetry and in village-speech it often ends in -an, as in karan. So, Lallā has (48) $\hbar h\bar{a}dan$, seeking, and $gw\bar{a}ran$, searching.

The verb $l\bar{o}sun$, to become weary, is irregular in the modern language, making its past participle $l\bar{u}s^u$, with a feminine $l\bar{u}s^u$ or $l\bar{u}bh^u$. Lallä (3, 44, &c.) gives the past participle masculine as $l\bar{u}st^u$, of which the feminine form would be, quite regularly, the modern $l\bar{u}bh^u$, which she also employs.

The Sanskrit present has become a future in modern Kāshmīrī. Besides this customary sense it is also used where we should employ a present subjunctive, and, occasionally, in its original sense of a present indicative. For our present purposes we can call this Kāshmīrī tense with its threefold meanings the 'Old Present'. It is thus conjugated in the modern language, taking talun, to flee, as our sample verb:—

0	, .	,	e, and our sumpre
	Singular.		Plural.
1.	tala.		t alav.
2.	talakh.		taliv.
3.	tali.		talan.

Corresponding to the Prakrit:-

Plural.
calāmō, calahũ.
calaha, calahu.
calanti, calahĩ.

It may be added that the terminations of the Kāshmīrī second person are evidently modern pronominal suffixes, which, as explained under the head of pronouns, must, in the case of this person, always be added to the verb.

Lalla more nearly approaches the original form of the first person singular in $\bar{a}s\bar{a}$, I may be (18), which, however, comes at the end of a line. We see traces of the original i of the second person singular in $z\bar{a}n\bar{e}kh$ (64), for $z\bar{a}nakh$, thou wilt know. In the third person singular she has, over and over again, a final \bar{e} instead of the final i. A few examples are $m\breve{o}b\bar{e}$ (11), $t\bar{u}r\bar{e}$ (16), $p\breve{e}y\bar{e}$ (18), $gabh\bar{e}$ (19, 45), $r\bar{o}b\bar{e}$ (21), $\bar{a}s\bar{e}$ (22), and so many others. In the modern language, this i usually becomes \breve{e} before pronominal suffixes.

When pronominal suffixes are added to this tense, Lallā now and then does not follow the usual modern practice. Thus, she has lagi-m, mod. lagĕ-m, it will be attached to me (41); khĕyi-wō, mod. khĕyi-wa, he will eat for you (K. Pr. 102); ninan-ay, mod. nin-ay, they will carry thee (K. Pr. 57); karin-ĕy, mod. karan-ay, they will make for thee (74); mārin-ĕy, mod. māran-ay, they will kill for thee (71). In the last two cases, the forms of the 3rd person plural would, in the modern language, belong to the present imperative, and not to this tense.

The past tense is formed from the past participle, which, in the masculine singular, ends in u-mātrā. Lallā lengthens this to \bar{u} at the end of a line in $m \bar{o} t \bar{u}$, for $m \bar{o} t^u$ (1). It will be observed that, unlike u-mātrā, the long \bar{u} does not epenthetically affect the preceding vowel. The feminine singular of this participle ends in \bar{u} -mātrā, but, in $ty \bar{o}j^i$ and $p \bar{o}j^i$ (both in 62), Lallā makes it end in i-mātrā. As already stated, \bar{u} -mātrā always represents an older \tilde{i} .

A second form of the past tense, in the case of some verbs, ends in au(v) or $\bar{v}(v)$, as in gau(v), (m. pl. gay), gone; pyau(v) (f. sg. $p\check{e}y\check{e}$), fallen. For the masculine plural of gauv, Lallā once has an older form $g\dot{a}y^i$ (66), written gaiy in 95; and, for the feminine of pyauv, she has, with the suffix of the second person singular, $p\check{e}yi-y$, for modern $p\check{e}y\check{e}-y$, fell to thee.

The past tenses of two verbs require special notice. In the modern language, the past tense of karun, to do, to make, runs as follows:—m. sg. koru-m, pl. kari-m; fem. sg. kürü-m, pl. karē-m, I made, and so on for the other persons. In 81, Lallā has kiyē-m instead of karē-m, a form quite unknown to the modern language, but reminding us of the Hindī kiyā. The other verb is dēshun, to see, modern past participle dyūthu. In the modern language, this verb always has a cerebral d, but Lallā has it, as has been pointed out under the head of phonetics, both cerebral and dental. Moreover, not only does she use the modern past participle $dy\bar{u}th^u$, but she also uses another past participle $dy\bar{u}kh^u$ (for $d\bar{e}kh^u$) (44), which may be compared with the Hindī $d\bar{e}khn\bar{a}$.

The third person (singular or plural) of the imperative ends in -in, as in karin, let him or them do or make. With the suffix of the first person singular it becomes kar^in -am, let him or them make me. Lallā changes the a of the suffix to \check{e} in dap^in - $\check{e}m$, let him or them say to me (21); $g\dot{a}nd^in$ - $\check{e}m$, let him or them bind on me (21); $k\dot{a}r^in$ - $\check{e}m$, let him or them make for me (21); $p\dot{a}d^in$ - $\check{e}m$, let him or them recite for me (18, 21). It will be remembered that there was a similar change of a to \check{e} in the second person singular of the old present. There was also a similar change in the case of suffixes added to the third person plural of the same tense, in which the same person also took the form of the imperative.

The polite imperative is formed by adding ta to the simple imperative. At the end of a line Lallā lengthens this in $h \check{e} t \bar{a}$ and $p \check{e} t \bar{a}$, both in 28. The second person plural is $dit\bar{o}$, modern $diy^i tav$, please give ye (100).

The future imperative is made by adding zi to the simple imperative. Lalla changes this to $z\bar{e}$ in $p\bar{e}z\bar{e}$, he must fall (45). A similar change occurs in $kh\bar{e}z\bar{e}$, he must eat (90), but here it is at the end of a line.

Indeclinables.—These call for but few remarks. A final i becomes \bar{e} at the end of a line in $at\bar{e}$, there (2, 98); $tat\bar{e}$, there (41); and $kun\bar{e}$, anywhere (9, 11; K. Pr. 201).

The adverb and conjunction ta appears in a strengthened form as $t\ddot{o}y$ in several places; and similarly na, not, is strengthened to $n\bar{a}$ or $n\bar{o}$, and the prohibitive particle ma to $m\bar{o}$ or mau. For all these see the Vocabulary.

The emphatic suffix -y is added in scores of instances without giving any emphasis at all, and apparently merely for the sake of metre. It is hence often difficult to say whether emphasis is intended or not. It often appears as an i-mātrā, and then seems to be always emphatic, as in tas^i , to him only (65); tal^i , it is I, even I, Lallā (105); tar^i , there verily (19, 61); yar^i , in the very place where (61); $sadby^i$ (from sada), always (7).

APPENDIX III

ON LALLA'S METRES

[By SIR GEORGE GRIERSON]

THE subject of Kāshmīrī prosody has never been investigated, and hardly anything is known about it. The following remarks may therefore be found of interest.

We may say that, in Kashmīr, two distinct metrical systems are known and cultivated. The first is that used for formal works, such as epic poems and the like. Here Persian metres, with many irregularities and licences, are employed. Numerous examples will be found in the edition of Mahmud Gāmī's Yūsuf Zulaikhā published by the late K. F. Burkhard in the 'Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenlandischen Gesellschaft', vols. xlix and liii. In that case we have a poem written by a Muslim in the Persian character, and the use of Persian metres is to be expected, but we find the same system in epics written by Hindus. For instance, a great portion of the Śiva-parinaya of Krsna Rāzdān is in the well-known hazaj metre, and the same is employed in the narrative portions of the Śrīrāmāvatāra-carita of Dēvâkara-prasāda Bhaṭṭa, a writer of the eighteenth century. As an example of the latter, 1 may quote a couple of lines: - > göbur ösus-na tantal öxu tamis man tithay yitha süre pöñis manz chuh köpan

He had no son, and his mind was agitated, Just as (the reflection of) the sun trembles in the water.

If, with the customary licence, we read the words osu and yitha each as one long syllable, we have at once a complete hazaj:—

The other metrical system is used in songs, and is by no means so simple a matter. I regret that, during my own stay in Kashmir, I neglected to study it, and when, after my return to this country, I endeavoured to ascertain from native sources what rules were followed in such compositions, I failed to obtain any definite information. All that I could gather was that a poet scanned his verses by ear. A long and minute examination of scores of songs led me to no certain conclusion beyond the fact that a stress-accent seemed to play an important part. Here and there I came across traces of well-known metres, but nowhere, even allowing for the fullest licence, did they extend over more than a few lines at a time. In the year 1917, Sir Aurel Stein had occasion to visit Kashmīr, and with his ever inexhaustible kindness, undertook to investigate the question. With the help of Pandit Nityânanda Śāstrī and a Śrāvakā, or professional reciter, he ascertained definitely that in songs the metre depends solely on the stress-accent. In Lulla's verses, four stresses go to each pāda, or line. Thus, if we mark the stressed syllables each with a perpendicular stroke, the first two songs would be read as follows:-

abhyösi savikas laye wöthu gaganas sagun myūlu sami terata shun golu ta anamay mŏtu yuhuy wöpadesh chuy hata

2 wākh mānas köl-aköl nā atē bhöpi mudri ati nā pravēsh rīzan shiwa-shēkath nā atē motuyčy kūh ta suy wŏpadēsh

So far as I am aware, this is not paralleled by any similar metric system in Persia or Northern India; but it is interesting to note that, although stress is the sole criterion of the metre, some of the songs give forth distant echoes of well-known Indian methods of scansion. Take, for instance, the second verse quoted above. It will not scan according to Indian rules, but nevertheless its lilt is strongly suggestive of the Indian $d\bar{o}h\bar{a}$. The $d\bar{o}h\bar{a}$ is a metre based on instants, each of which is the time occupied in uttering one short syllable, one long syllable counting as two instants. Each half-verse is divided into the following groups of instants:—6+4+3, 6+4+1. The group of 3 is generally an iambus (\circ –), and the second half-line generally ends in a trochee ($-\circ$). The opening verse of the Sat-saiy \bar{a} of Vihārī is a good Hindī example:—

It will be noticed that in Lallā's second verse, as in a dōhā, the first and third lines end in a strongly marked iambus. So, again, the second and fourth lines end in a heavy long closed syllable, which, with the inherent vowel, not pronounced, of the final consonant, is really a trochee, as in the above dōhā. But this is not all. In Lallā's verse, if we read the unstressed mu of mudri, and the word $n\bar{a}$ as short, thus:— it would scan, like the second section of a $d\bar{o}h\bar{a}$ in instants:—6+4+1.

In the same way, other songs that I have examined show traces of other well-known metres, Persian or Indian, and it is evident that the rude village compositions which developed into the verses of Lalla were originally intended to be based on some standard metre, but that in the mouths of the rustics stress became substituted for quantity.

So far as my experience goes, no such development has taken place in Hindostan or the Panjab. Here the rules of prosody depending on the quantity of each syllable are everywhere followed, although, of course, in the ruder songs, great metrical licence prevails. We observe a similar state of affairs in Southern India. A series of Kanarese Ballads was published in the Indian Antiquary by the late Dr. Fleet, and regarding them he observes 1 that they follow the principle of Kanarese metre consisting of feet of four instants each. 'But no absolute metrical precision is aimed at; and—though the principle of construction is distinctly recognizable—in carrying it out by scanning or in adapting the words to the airs, short syllables have been drawn out long and long syllables clipped short, ad libitum. . . . The rhythm of the songs can only be learned by actually hearing them sung.'

I believe that the only Indo-Arvan language that shows a tendency to substitute, as in Kāshmīrī, stress for quantity is Bengali. It will have been observed that in Lalla's verses quoted above there is a stress on the first syllable of every line. Similarly, Mr. J. D. Anderson 2 has shown that in Bengali verse, although quantity is sometimes nominally observed, the metre is conditioned by a strong phrasal stressaccent falling on the beginning of each line and on the first syllable after each casura. Usually the verse consists of a fixed number of syllables, wholly independent of quantity; and this number, regulated and controlled by the stressaccents, constitutes the metre. Mr. Anderson-and I am entirely of his opinion—is inclined to see Tibeto-Burman influence in this metrical system of Bengal. Could we be justified in suggesting a similar foreign influence in Kashmīr? The population of the Happy Valley is far from being homogeneous. Local tradition compels us to consider it as very probable that, although the upper classes are probably of the same stock as that of North-Western India, a substratum of the inhabitants is connected with non-Indian tribes whose original home was Central Asia, and this is borne out by the results of philological inquiries. It was in this substratum, not amongst the learned Paṇḍits of Kashmīr, that the rude songs which developed into Lallā's verses and into the songs of modern Kashmīr took their rise.

A well-known parallel to Lalla's abandonment of quantity in exchange for stress-accent is to be found in mediaeval Greek and Latin poetry. Here, of course, there can be no question of mutual influence, although we find just the same state of affairs. The accentual poems of Gregory of Nazianzen bear much the same relation to the other poems composed by him and by the writers of classical times that the verses of Lalla bear to the amiain pānakavvam of Hāla and of the older Indian poets whose quatrains are preserved in his anthology.

VOCABULARY

This vocabulary contains every word in the foregoing verses of Lalla, with a reference to each place in which it occurs. The order of words is that adopted by Sir George Grierson in other works on Kāshmīrī, the arrangement being based on the English alphabetical order of the consonants, without regard to the yowels. The latter come into consideration only in cases in which the same consonant is followed, or the same consonants are separated by different vowels. Thus, the different words containing the consonants tr will be found in the succession $t\bar{a}r$, $t\bar{o}r$, $t\bar{o}r^u$, $t\bar{u}r^i$, and $t\bar{u}r^u$. All words beginning with vowels are arranged together at the commencement, their mutual order being determined by the consonants. Long and nasalized vowels are not differentiated from short ones, except in cases where the difference between two words depends only on such variations. principle has been followed in the case of diacritical marks. For instance, pithis precedes pëtarum, because h precedes r, the difference between t and t being ignored. The letter t follows t (and t). As the consonants v and w merely represent different phases of the same sound, they are treated, for the purposes of alphabetical order, as the same letter.

In Kāshmīrī the sonant aspirates gh, dh, dh, and bh^1 lose their aspiration, although, in the case of tatsamas, the aspiration is sometimes retained in writing. Even in this latter respect there is no uniform custom, the same word being written indiscriminately with or without the aspiration. one time a man will write abhyās, and at another time he will write abyās. Similarly, Lallā writes bhāryā, a wife, with bh, but $b\bar{u}t(h)$ (Sanskrit $bh\bar{u}ta$), a principle of creation, with b. The latter is a Saiva technical term, and, of all words, we should have expected it to be spelt in the Sanskrit fashion. To avoid confusion, I have therefore, for the purposes of alphabetical order, treated each of these sonant aspirates as identical with its corresponding unaspirated letter. That is to say, gh will be found in the place allotted to g, dh in that allotted to d, dh in that allotted to d, and bh in that allotted to b.

WORDS BEGINNING WITH VOWELS

- \tilde{a} , interj. added to pashi (see pashun) m. c., and with it forming pashy \tilde{a} , 16.
- abēd, m. absence of difference, identity; sg. abl. abēda, while, or although, there is identity (of the soul with the Supreme), 13.
- $ab\check{o}d^u$, adj. one who has no knowledge, a fool, i.e. one who has no knowledge of himself; pl. nom. $ab\check{o}d^i$, 6.
- abakh, a word of doubtful meaning; perhaps = clumsy, stupid, 85, q.v.
- abal, adj. c. g. without strength, weak, weak from sickness; f. sg. abl. abali, used as subst., 8.
- aběn, adj. c. g. not different, identical; aběn rimarshā, (they are) identical, (as one can see) on reflection, 16.
- abhyā, m. repeated practice, esp. of yōga or of meditation on the identity of the Self with the Supreme, 1; habitual practice of a course of conduct, 20; sg. ag. abhyō, i, 1.
- achi, f. the eye; achë lugañë tālav, the eyes to be turned upwards, K. Pr. 102; achën hyuhu, like the eyes, K. Pr. 201.
- ada, adv. then, at that time, 24, 31, 61, 80, 95, 103, K. Pr. 56.
- adal ta wadal, m. interchange, confusion, K. Pr. 102.
- aduy^u, adj. non-dual; (of the mind) convinced of the non-duality or identity of the Self with the Supreme, 5, 65.
- aham, I, the ego; aham-vimarshe, by reflection on the nature of the ego, 15.
- āhārun, to eat food; impve. sg. 2, āhār, 28.
- oku, eard. one: with emph. y, okuy, one only, the only one, the unique, 34; m. sg. abl. aki něngi, at one time, on one occasion, 50; nimēshě aki, in a single twinkle of the eye, 26. Cf. yēka.
- akh, card. one, 34; as indefinite article, a, 50, 83 (bis); akhāh, one, a single one, K. Pr. 150. Cf. yēka.
- ökh, m. a mark, a sign impressed upon anything; esp. a mark indicating eminence or excellence, 75. Cf. the next.
- $\delta khun$, to make a mark: to impress a mark upon anything, to brand anything; impress sg. 2, δkh , 76.
- akhër, m. a syllable, such as the syllable $\bar{o}\dot{m}$, or the like, 10.
- akŏl, m. that which transcends the kula, i.e. the sphere of the Absolute, or of Transcendental Being, 79; kŏl-akŏl, the totality of all creation, 2. See kŏl, and Note on Yōga, § 19.

akriy, adi. c. g. not acting, free from work; hence, in a religious sense, free from the bond of works as an impediment to salvation, in a state of salvation, 32, 45.

al, m. wine (offered to a god), 10 (cf. pal); the wine of bliss or nectar of bliss, said to flow from the digits of the moon (see $s\bar{o}m$); al-than, the place of this nectar, the abode of bliss, i. e. union with the Supreme, 60. Al-than, however, may also be explained as equivalent to the Sanskrit alamsthāna, i.e. the place regarding which only 'neti neti' can be said, or which can be described by no epithet, the highest place (anultara pada), i.e. also, union with the Supreme.

 $al\partial nd^{\bar{u}}$, adj. (f. $al\partial nz^{\bar{u}}$), pendant, hanging, 102 (f. sg. nom.). $\bar{a}lav$, m. a call, a cry; $-dyun^u$, to summon, K. Pr. 102.

ālawun, to wave, move up and down; pres. part. ālawān, K. Pr. 57.

àmi, ami, see ath.

ōm, the mystic syllable ōm, the pranara; sg. gen. ōmaki cōlaka, with the whip of the pranava, 101; ōm-kār, the syllable ōin, 34, 82.

It is believed that the syllable oin contains altogether five elements, viz. a, u, m, and the Bindu and Nāda, on which see Note on Yōga, §§ 23, 24, and anāhath. δm^u , adj. raw, uncooked; (of an earthen vessel) unbaked, 106;

(of a string) not twisted, and hence without strength, 106; m. sg. abl. āmi, 106; m. pl. dat. āmēn, 106.

ambar, m. clothing, clothes, garments, 28, 76.

amolu, adj. undefiled, pure, free from all defilement (of the Supreme), 64.

amalon^u, adj. (f. amalon^ü), undefiled, 21 (f. sg. nom.).

amar, m. immortality; amara-pathi, on the path (leading) to immortality, i.e. in the path of reflection on the Self or ego, 70.

amreth, m. the water of immortality, nectar, amrta; sg. abl. amrěla-sar, the lake of nectar, i.e. of the nectar of bliss (ananda) of union with the Supreme, 68. Regarding the nectar distilled from the microcosmic moon, see Note on Yōga, §§, 8, 19, 21, 22.

onu, adj. blind; m. pl. ag. anyau, 59.

anad, adj. c. g. without beginning, existing from eternity, an epithet of the Supreme, 72.

andar, postpos. in, within; kūtharĕ-andar, in the closet, 101; andaray akun, one must enter into the very inmost part, 94; $and^a riy$, from the inmost recesses, 109.

and ryumu, adj. (f. and arimu, 104), belonging to the interior, inner, 4, 104.

anahath, adj. c. g. unobstructed, whose progress is perpetual: (often) that of which the sound is everlasting, the mystic syllable $\bar{o}\dot{m}$ (15), also called the anahath sheld, or (33) anāhata-rav. In Sanskrit it is called the anāhata-dhvani (Note on Yoga, § 23). It is described as having the semblance of inarticulateness (avyaktánukrtiprāya), to be uttered only by the deity dwelling within the breast of living creatures, and therefore to have no human utterer or obstructor of its sound. It is composed of a portion of all the vowels nasalized, and is called anahath (Skr. anahata), i.e. perpetual, because it never comes to a close but vibrates perpetually (an-astam-ita-rūpatwāt). Another explanation of the name is that it is 'sound caused without any percussion', i.e. self-created. It is said (33) to take its rise from the heart and to issue through the nose. In 15, it is described as identical with, or as equivalent to, the Supreme Himself.

As a Śaiva technical term $an\bar{a}hata$ sometimes does not designate $\bar{o}m$, but is applied to other things. For instance, it is used as the name of the fourth of the mystic cakras, or circles. See Note on Yōga, §§ 15, 17, 23, 25, 27.

anāmay, adj. c. g. not bad; hence, perfect; that which is perfect and free from all qualities, pure consciousness, the Supreme, 1.

ann, pl. m. food, victuals, 28.

anun, to bring; wagi anun, to bring under the rein, to bring into subjection, 37; laye anun, to bring under subjection by concentration of the mind and breath, 82.

Fut. sg. 3, ani, 37; past. part. m. sg. with suff. 1st pers. sg. ag. onum, 82.

anth, m. an end; anti (54) or antihi (33, 37, 38, 41, 61), adv.

in the end, finally, ultimately.

antar, m. the inner meaning, the hidden meaning, mystery

(of anything), 56. anway, m. logical connexion; tenor, drift, purport; the real truth (concerning anything), 59.

apān, m. one of the five vital airs (1, prāṇa, 2, apāna, 3, samāna, 4, udāna, 5, vyāna). Of these, two (prāṇa and apāna) are referred to by L. D. See Note on Yōga, § 16 note.

The apānā (Ksh. apān) is the vital air that goes downwards and out at the anus. The prānā is that which goes npwards and is exhaled through the mouth and nose. For perfect union with the Supreme, it is necessary to bring these two into absolute control, 26. Cf. Deussen, Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, i. 2, p. 248, 3, p. 70. See Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16, 21, 23, and Articles nādi and prān, 2, for full particulars.

āparun, to put food into another's mouth, to feed from the hand. Conj. part. āparith, 66.

 $ap\bar{u}t^u$, adj. unclean, impure, ceremonially unclean; m. pl. nom., with emph. y, $ap\bar{u}tiy$, 32.

 $\bar{o}r$, adv. there, in that place; $\bar{o}ra$ -y, even from there, K. Pr. 102.

arg, m. an offering of unhusked grain made in worshipping a god (Skr. argha, in a slightly different sense), 42.

arsh, m. the sky, the firmament; sg. dat. (in sense of loc.), arshës, 50.

artun 1, m. the act of worshipping, worship, 58.

artun 2, to worship; inf. artun, 10; fut. pass. part. artun, worship is to be done (with dat. of obj.), 33.

arcun, m. the result of labour, earnings, 61.

 $\ddot{v}s$, m. the mouth; sg. abl. $\ddot{v}s\ddot{a}$ (a form not found in modern Ksh.), 18.

ashwawar, m. a rider (on a horse), 14, 15.

asun, to laugh; fut. (in sense of pres.) sg. 3, asi, 46.

āsun, to be, 18, 20, 36, 86, 92; to become, 64; to come into existence, 22; to happen, 84, 85; to be, to remain, to continue, 46, 55; ösith, having been, i.e. whereas thou wast formerly (so and so, now thou hast become such and such), 86.

Conj. part. $\ddot{o}sith$, 84–6. Fut. ind. and pres. subj. sg. 1, $\ddot{a}s\ddot{a}$ (m. c. for $\ddot{a}sa$), 18; 3, $\ddot{a}si$ (in sense of pres.), 46; $\ddot{a}s\ddot{c}$ (m. c.) (fut.), 22; pl. 3, $\ddot{a}san$, 92; impve. sg. 2, $\ddot{a}s$, 20, 36, 55, 64. asta, adv. slowly, gradually, 80.

āsawun", n. ag. one who is or continues; sthir āsawun", that which is permanent, 73.

ata, f. the shoulders; the rope for tying a burden on the shoulders; ata-gand, the knot by which this rope is tied, 108. ati, adv. there, in that place, 2; atē, m. e. for ati, 2 (bis), 98. ath, pron., that (within sight); adj. sg. ag. m. āmi, K. Pr.

150; abl. ami, 107.

atha, m. the hand; atha-wās karun, (of two persons) to join hand in hand, to hold each other's hand (for mutual confidence), 92; sg. abl. atha trāwun, to dismiss from the hand, to let loose, to set free, 88; loc. athē, in the hand; (to be) in a person's possession, (to come) to hand, 98, K. Pr. 18; athē hyon", to carry in the hand, 10.

ātmā, m. the Self; esp. the Self as identical with the Supreme; old. sg. gen. ātmāsē (probably m. c. for ātmāsi, quasi-Sanskrit *ātmasya), 22 (see p. 133).

abhun, adv. not torn; hence, uninterruptedly, continuously, 19. abhun, to become weak, feeble, emaciated; pres. part. abhūn, becoming feeble, hence, wearily, 19.

atun, to enter. Fut. pass. part. m. sg. atun, it is to be entered, i.e. you should (or may) enter = 'come in', 94; impve. pol. sg. 3, mata àtian, lit. let him not enter (as a question), i.e. he certainly does enter, 53; past f. sg. 1, tayes, I (f.) entered, 68.

 $\bar{a}r$, $\bar{a}y$, $\bar{a}y\ddot{e}$, $\bar{a}y\ddot{e}s$, see yun^u .

 $b\bar{a}$, interj. Sir! 87 (bis), 88 (quater).

 $bh\bar{u}$, in $bh\bar{u}$ -tal, the surface of the earth, the whole earth as opposed to the sky, 22, 42; $bh\bar{u}r$, id., $bh\bar{u}r$ bhuwah swar, the earth, the atmosphere, and heaven, i.e. the whole visible universe, 9.

bocha, f. hunger, 37; abl. bocha- (for bochi-) sūty marun, to die of hunger, 83.

bicőr^u, adj. (f. bicör^u), without means, without resources, destitute, unfortunate, wretched; f. sg. ag. bicāri, 89.

bodh, perfect intelligence, knowledge of the Self, svátma-jñāna; bōdha-prakāsh, the enlightenment or illumination of this knowledge, 35.

hợdu, adj. wise, a wise man, one who is intelligent; m. sg. ag.

 $b \delta d^i$, 26.

hādun, to afflict, cause pain to; p. p. m. sg. with suff. 1st pers. sg. ag, bôdum, 7.

hŏdun, to sink, be immersed in, be drowned in; past m. sg. 2. bŏdukh, 74.

bāg, m. a garden, K. Pr. 56; swaman-bāga-bar, the door of the garden of one's soul, or sŏman-bāga-bar, the door of the jasmine-garden, 68, see art. swa; sg. dat. bāgas, K. Pr. 56. bagawān, m. God; sg. voc. bagawāna, K. Pr. 102.

kāran, m. a cause; a means; sg. ag. kārānⁱ pranawākⁱ, by means of the pranava, 76. In Śaiva philosophy, there are three causes of the material world, viz. the impurities (mala) that affect the soul. These are (1) ānava-mala, or the impurity due to the soul, which in reality is identical with Śiva, deeming itself to be finite: (2) māyīya-mala, or impurity due to cognition of the differentiation of things, i.e. that one thing is different from another; and (3) kārma-mala, or the impurity due to action, resulting in pleasure or pain, 75.

karun, to do, 34, 37, 58, 61, 68, 74, 91, 95; to make, 17, 65, 81, 82, 85, 87, 89, 99 = K. Pr. 46; K. Pr. 102; làli làli karān, making the sound 'Làli Làli', i.e. erying out, 'It is I, Lal; it is I, Lal', 105; shiwa shiwa karān, uttering (or calling to mind) the words 'Siva, Siva', 65.

klēsh karun, to give trouble, to cause pangs, 51; nād karun, to utter a cry, 72; vishēsh karun, to do a speciality, to act in a special character, 54; tětas karun, to impress upon the mind, 34.

karith gathun, to make completely, 95; in heth karith and dith karith, both in 12, karith, like the modern keth, and like the Hindī kar, has little more than the force of a suffix of the conjunctive participle.

This verb makes many nominal compounds. Thus, athawās karith, holding each other's hand, = encouraging each other, 92; $cy\ddot{o}\ddot{n}^{\ddot{u}}$ sinth $kar\ddot{a}n$, he takes thought for thee, 72; dam karun, to suppress the breath (as an ascetic exercise), 4; $d\ddot{a}r^{u}$ karun, to drive away, K.Pr. 56; hal karun, to exert oneself, strive hard, 48; lath $kar\ddot{u}\ddot{n}^{\ddot{u}}$, to kick, 102; lay $kar\ddot{u}\ddot{n}^{\ddot{u}}$, to devote oneself ardently to any object, 60, 68; lay karun, to cause to be absorbed, 76; $p\ddot{u}z$ $kar\ddot{u}\ddot{n}^{\ddot{u}}$, to worship (dat. of obj.), 17, 21; $sn\ddot{a}n$ karun, to bathe oneself, 32, 46; thaph $kar\ddot{u}\ddot{n}^{u}$, to grasp (dat. of obj.), 4.

kō-zana, adv. or interj. who knows?; used in anxiety or the like, as in kō-zana kyāh bani tas, who knows what will happen to him, i.e. some calamity will probably occur to him. But Lal seems to use it as a mere adv. meaning 'by what means', quasi 'who knows what means (will effect so and so)', 73, 74. In 72, she has kō-zanañi, i.e. in the ablative feminine of the genitive, and uses it as a relative adverb meaning 'how', 'by what means' (God takes thought as to the means by which hunger will depart from thee).

lūb, desire, greed, cupidity, the chief of the six 'enemies', or sins which impede union with the Supreme. The six are kāma, sexual desire; krōdha, wrath; lōbha, desire; mada, arrogance; mōha, delusion of mind; and matsara, jealousy. In Monier Williams's Sanskrit Dictionary, s.v. sad-varga, harsa, joy, and māna, pride, are substituted for mōha and matsara; but the above is the list given in Kirātārjunīya, i. 9, viz.:—

kāmaļ krādhas tathā lābhā mada-māhau ca matsaraļ.

In L. V. 12 and 30, $l\bar{o}bha$, or Ksh. $l\bar{u}b$, is mentioned alone, to indicate all six. In 43, three,— $l\bar{o}bha$, manmatha (= $k\bar{a}ma$), and mada,—and in 71, $k\bar{a}ma$, $kr\bar{o}dha$ (Ksh. $kr\bar{u}d$), and $l\bar{o}bha$, are in each case mentioned to indicate all six. Cf. 13.

milawun, caus. of melun, to join, unite; conj. part. milavith, 69.

māms, m. flesh; sg. gen. (m. pl. nom.) māmsāki, 81.

man, m. the mind, the thinking faculty (Skr. manas), 5, 12, 17, 18, 45, 65, 93; K. Pr. 57. This is roughly the meaning of the word, and will suit for the translation of the above passages, but, as a term of Saiva philosophy, it is not sufficiently accurate. According to Deussen (Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, I, 3, p. 490; cf. ib., pp. 58 ff., 352, 374, 604 ff., 648), the functions of the manas are that on the one hand, it forms the impressions delivered by the organ of cognition (buddhi) into conceptions, which are then preserved as finished products of cognition in the buddhi. On the other hand, it executes the decisions derived from the buddhi by influencing the organs of action. This technical meaning of manas (Ksh. man) can be traced in its use in 23, 27, 31, 40, 79, 80, 105.

In L. V. 71, the meaning of man is further extended to indicate the exercise of the thinking faculty, careful thought. Man ratun, to seize the mind, to bring it under subjection, 55; swa-man, one's own mind, 68, 98. In 68, there is a play upon words, swaman being also used as equivalent to sŏman or suman, the jasmine.

Sg. dat. manas, 17, 31; with emph. y, manasqy, 23; loc. mani, 18, 45; abl. mana, 80, 98; with emph. y, manay, 71; gen. (m. sg. abl.) manaki, K. Pr. 57.

mān, m. the possession of a good reputation, respectability, 24. mandal, m. a circular disk, 75 (cf. sūrya); a district, locality, 33 (cf. dwādashānth).

manush, m. a man, a human being; voc. hā manushĕ, O man!, 107; manushĕ-māms, human flesh, 81.

manth^ar, m. a religious mystic formula (Skr. mantra), 11, 34 (bis), 39, 40, 58. A mantra is an aggregation of apparently unmeaning sounds. It has no efficacy unless the utterer is aware of the mystic meaning of each sound, which has to be taught by a gurn, or spiritual preceptor. By meditating on a mantra, with full knowledge, unity with the Supreme is attained.

Sg. abl. mantra, 39, 40; pl. nom. manthar, 34.

manz, postpos. governing dat., in; pānas-manz, in myself, 44. In 98, it means 'having reached the middle', and exceptionally governs the abl. (swamana-sŏthi manz, having reached the middle of the embankment of (the illusions of) my own mind, or suman-sŏthi manz, having reached the middle of an embankment (furnished) with small bridges). In K. Pr. 57, manz precedes the word it governs,—manz maidānas, in a field.

- $n\bar{a}b$, \hat{f} , the navel; a focus, or central point, hence the focus of the body, the kanda, or bulb, between the pudendum and the navel, which is the root of the nadis, or tubes, through which the prana, or life-wind, circulates. See Note on Yōga, § 5. Sg. abl. nābi, 34; nābi-sthāna, of the region of the kanda, 57. Regarding the heat in the navel, see pran, 2.
- nābad, m. sugar-candy; nābādi-bār, a load of sugar-candy, 108. něbar, adv. outside, abroad, 4; K. Pr. 102 (bis); něbara, from outside, 94.
- nech, adj. good, 35 (bis); as adv. well, successfully, fortunately, 37. The more usual form of this word is nekh, cf. Prs. nek. něchatur, m. a lunar asterism; the season during which the sun, or the moon, is passing through a lunar asterism; hence, a time or moment fixed by astrology, 3.

nad, f. a river, 57, 96; K. Pr. 47; sg. dat. sūti nadi, (contact) with the river, 57.

nād, m.a cry, call, loud sound, 72. For nāda-bindu (15), see bindu. nadi, f. a tube, artery, vein; esp. the tubes through which the vāyu, or life-winds, circulate. See Note on Yoga, & 5, 6, There are fourteen of these,—rising from the kanda, or region between the pudendum and the navel (cf. $n\bar{a}b$). Of these fourteen, ten (named ida, pingala, susumna, gandhari, hastijihvā, pūsā, yašasvinī, alambusā, kuhū, and śankhinī) are the principal (hence the dashĕ-nādi-wāv of L. V. 69). The principal vital airs are five in number, viz. prána, or upward flowing air, which has its seat in the lungs; apana, or downward flowing air; udāna, which rises in the throat, and enters the head; samana, which has its seat in the cavity of the navel, and is essential to digestion: and vyāna. that which is diffused through the whole body. These course through the various nadis, and the object of the Saiva ascetic is to restrain them by prandyama. For this exercise, see Note on Yoga, § 21. By it, the prana and apána are united to the udāna. The fire of udāna then rises in the central nadi, which causes the dissolution of prana and apana, thus leading to samadhi, or consciousness independent of objects (see Translation of Sivasūtra-vimaršinī, pp. x and 41). Hence, L. V. 69 mentions the uniting of the winds of the ten nadis. In L. V. 80, nadi-dal is 'the collection of nādis', 'the whole group of nādis'. authoress wishes that she had been able to bring the ten nādis under her mental control (by prānāyāma, &c.), and thus been able to obtain *amādhi.

prān, 1, m. an onion, 89, 90, in both cases with a double meaning, referring also to prān, 2. So, with similar double meaning, prāna-tūr, a thief of onions, or the thief of my vital breath, 101.

prān, 2, m. the vital breath (in 89, 90, 101, this word is used with a double meaning, in the sense of 'vital breath', and also in the sense of pran, 1, an onion); hence, life, the body as a living entity, 90 (ter).

According to Hindū scriptures there are five principal vital airs (vāyu) in the body, viz. prāna, apāna, samāna, udāna, and vyāna. See Note on Yōga, §§ 2, 16. Of these, two (prāna and apāna) are referred to by Lallū. There are also five secondary vital airs, or upaprāna, named nāga, kūrma, krkala, dēvadatta, and dhanamjaya, respectively.

According to the Mahābhārata (xii, 6844 ff.) prana resides within the head, and, with the heat that is there, causes all kinds of exertion. The prana is the living creature, the universal soul, the Eternal Being, the Mind, Intellect, and Consciousness of all living creatures, &c. Thus, the living being is, in every respect, caused by prana to move about and exert himself.... The heat, residing between apana and prana in the region of the navel (cf. L. V. 57), operates, with the aid of these two breaths, in digesting all food that is taken by a living creature. There is a tube beginning from the mouth and ending in the anal canal. From this main tube numerous subsidiary tubes branch out in the bodies of all living creatures (see art. nādi). In consequence of the rush of the several breaths (the ten just mentioned,—see also below), these breaths mingle together. The heat that dwells in prána causes digestion. . . . The prána, bearing a current of heat, descends from the head downwards to the extremity of the anal canal, and thence is pushed upwards again. Coming back to its seat in the head, it once more sends back the heat that it bears.... The main tube leading from the mouth to the anus is the path by which Yogins succeed in attaining to the Supreme by holding the soul within the brain (Sörensen's Index to the Mahābhārata, s. v. prāna).

The above is the account given in the Mahābhārata. Later accounts describe the five principal airs as follows:—
prāna is the upward flowing air which has its seat in the lungs, and is exhaled through the mouth and nose (L. V. 57 accounts for its heat by stating that it rises from the region of the navel: see nāb); apāna is the downward flowing air, which is expelled from the anus; udāna is that which rises in the throat, and enters the head; sumāna is that which has its seat in the cavity of the navel, and is essential to digestion; and vyāna that which is diffused through the whole body. These course through the various tubes, or nādis, and the object of the Saiva ascetic is to restrain them, the process being called prānāyāma. For the methods by which this process is carried out, see Note on Yōga, § 21.

The main object is to bring prána and apána under complete control, as stated in L. V. 26. Cf. pavan, which Lallā uses as equivalent to prān. On the whole subject, see Deussen, Allgemeine Geschichte der Philosophie, I. 2, p. 248; 3, p. 70.

Reference has already been made to L. V. 26 and 57. In 89 (in one meaning) people are invited to take, or grasp, the vital breath (so as to bring it under control). In the other meaning, they are invited to buy onions (prān, 1). In 90, the word prān has, perhaps, the more general sense of the ordinary breath of life, or one's own body as a living being. In 101, prāna-tūr may be translated 'a thief of onions', and also 'the thief of vital breath', i. e. the worldly temptations which prevent the proper control of the prāna. In 69, wāv, wind, is used, as a synonym of prān, for the vital airs.

 $pron^u$, adj. old, of olden time; f. sg. nom. $pron^u$, 63. pairun, to put on (clothes); conj. part. pairith, 76.

shěh (13) or shě (25), card. six; ag. sg. shěy, by (a group of) six, 13; pl. dat. (for gen.) shěn, (a lord) of six, 13.

The number six has various mystic meanings. there are six attributes of the Deity, viz. (1) sarvajñatā, omniscience, (2) trpti, contentment, (3) anādibādha, having perception from eternity, (4) svatantratā, absolute independence, or absolute self-sufficiency, (5) nityam-aluptaśakti, having potency that is incapable of being diminished, and (6) anantaśakti, omnipotence. There are six enemies, or sins which impede union with the Supreme. For a list of these, see $l\bar{u}b$. There are six $\bar{u}rmis$, or human infirmities, viz. (1) śōka, grief, (2) mōha, delusion, (3) jarā, old age, (4) marana, death, (5) keudh, hunger, and (6) pipāsā, thirst. There are six avasthās, or periods of human life, (1) sisutva, babyhood, (2) bālya, childhood, (3) kaumāra, youth, (4) yauvana, puberty, (5) tārunya, young manhood, and (6) vārdhakya, old age. Some omit numbers 1 and 5, and have only four periods, translating yauvana by 'manhood'. All these sextets are referred to in 13. There are, further, six vikāras, or changes of condition, in a man's life, indicated by the six verbs, asti, he exists; jāyatē, he is born; vardhatē, he grows up; vipariņamatē, he is developed; apakṣāyatē, he declines; and nasyati, he is destroyed (82).

In 25 and 82, reference is made to the six cakras, or circles, regarding which, see Note on Yoga, & 9, 13 ff.

shëhol^u, 1, m. coolness; shëhol^u karun, to make coolness, to cool oneself, K. Pr. 102.

shëholu, 2, adj. cool; f. sg. nom. shëhujü, K. Pr. 102.

shokh, f. fear, apprehension, 73-6.

shëkun, to fear, to be afraid; impve. fut. shëkizi, 70.

shěkath, f. the śakli, or energic power of a deity, conceived as the female consort of the latter; esp. in these poems, the Sakti of Siva. She is the immanent aspect of Siva, i.e. the aspect in which he pervades the universe. She is not in any way different from, or independent of, the Supreme Siva, but is one and the same with him. She is immanent in every human being, and has herself an infinite number of aspects or modes. In order to obtain final emancipation, it is necessary to grasp the fact of her essential oneness with the Supreme, 68; Shwa-shěkath, Šiva and his Sakti, 2.

shēl, f. a large stone, a rock, 52 (ter).

shīl, m. good behaviour, right conduct, 24.

sohil, ? m. the seashore, K. Pr. 46.

shëm, tranquillity, quietism, quietude, absence of passion, 71; shëm-dam, quietude and self-restraint; sg. abl. shëma-dama-kriyë-püñü, the hedge of holy acts joined to quietism and self-restraint, 63.

sō'ham (90), a Sanskrit formula meaning 'I am He', or 'I am That', and expressing the identity of the soul with the Supreme. With the letters reversed, it becomes hamsa, which is used as a mantra, or mystic formula. See hams, 2.

shëmbhu, Sambhu, a name of Siva; sg. dat. shëmbhus, 45.

shëmun, to be quiet, to be at peace, 27; (of water) to be at rest (and gradually soak away), 106; pres. part. shëman, 106; fut. sg. 3, shëmi, 27.

shēnkar, m. Sankara, a name of Siva, 25; shēnkar-swātma, Siva (recognized as) one with Self, 39, 40; shēnkara-bokt^u, one who is full of devotional faith to Siva, f. -bhükb^u, 18.

shūn, m. the transcendental Void, emptiness (Skr. śūnya); in Saiva philosophy, the imaginary body in which one feels oneself in dreams, a vague, indistinct, and undefined something which is practically 'Nothing', not unlike the 'nothing' of the experience of the really dreamless deepsleep state in our waking life (see Siva-sūtra-vimaršiuī, trans. p. 18, and Kashmir Shaivism, pp. 77, 82). When a Universe comes into apparent existence, the Supreme Being, after a course of development through various phases (K. Shaivism, pp. 62 ff.), associates Himself with Māyā (illusion), and thereby becomes subjected to limited individual experience. In the first stage of this association, He, as the experiencer, loses the realization of Himself as the Self of the experience; and, as this happens, He becomes sleepy. In this sleep His perception of Himself as 'All This' becomes dim, as the vague, undefined, something, or sūnya, already mentioned. Sūnya may therefore be looked upon as the first stage in limited consciousness, and in the reverse order (of the soul becoming united with the Supreme) it is therefore the last stage of limited consciousness before the soul becomes conscious of universal experience as one with the Supreme in one of the five phases or conditions prior to this association with Māyā. In the microcosm of the body, Yōgīs locate this śūnya in the sahasrára. See Note on Yōga, & 20, 24.

Hence Lallā, in 1, says that, when the shūñ (i.e. śūnya) became dissolved (in the course of union with the Deity) only pure (i.e. universal) consciousness remained.

Lallā is fond of the expression shūnēs shūnāh mīlith ganv (11, 30, 69). Here shūnēs is the dative singular, and shūnāh is the nominative singular with the suffix of the indefinite article, and the whole means literally 'a void became merged in the Void' that is to say, a thing which is really nothing, or mere emptiness, became merged in the Great Sūnya explained above. The thing which is really nothing is the apparent material existence,—the material world, or the consciousness of the material world. With the acquirement of true knowledge, its unreality is recognized, and the apparent reality disappears in the transcendental Void. Cf. the remarks on L. V. 69 in art. sōm.

Sg. nom. $sh\bar{u}\tilde{n}$, 1; with suff. indef. art. $sh\bar{u}\tilde{n}ah$, 11, 30, 69; dat. $sh\bar{u}\tilde{n}es$, 11, 30, 69.

shūñākār, m. having the form of the Void, reduced to becoming nothing but the Great Void (see $sh\bar{u}\bar{n}$), 50.

shūñālay, m. he whose abode is the Great Void (see shūñ), i.e. the Supreme, 15.

shur^u, m. an infant; $d\ddot{o}da$ -shur^u, a milk-infant, a sucking child, 70.

shramāwun, to labour at; hence, dŏd shramāwun, to labour at milk, to milk, 38.

shrutawón^u, m. one who hears well, one who is the reverse of being deaf, 20.

shrōśun, to become pure; 2 past, m. sg. 3, with suff. 1st pers. sg. gen. shrōśyōm, 105.

shëshi, m. the moon; shëshi-kal, a digit of the moon, 25, 69; shëshi-ras, moon-juice, the water of immortality, nectar, amrta, sg. abl. -rasa, 40. For the mystic terminology in connexion with the moon in Saiva theology, see art. sōm.

shāsatar, m. a holy book, the general body of sacred writings;

sg. abl. shāstra, 27.

shësatar, m. iron; sg. dat. shëstaras, 100 = K. Pr. 46.

shāth, m. a sand-bank (hidden under water) in a stream, a shoal; sg. abl. with emph. y, shāthay, 84, 85.

shěth, card. a hundred; shěth-shěti, hundreds, 6.

shiv, m. Siva, the Supreme Deity, absorption in whom is final emancipation, 8, 14, 51-54, 80; sg. gen. shiwun^u, 58; dat. shiwas, 68; voc. shiwa shiwa karān, uttering the cry of 'Siva! Siva!', i.e. meditating on the fact that all that exists is one with Him, 65; shiwa-may, made up of Siva, consisting of Siva, 16; shiwa-pūzan, the worship of Siva, 22; shiwa-shěk^uth, Siva and his śakti, or energic power, 2, cf. 68, and art. shěk^ath; parama-shiv, the Supreme Siva (gen. -shiwun^u), 58; tētana-shiv, Siva in his quality of Supreme Spirit, as opposed to his more material manifestations, 79.

shwās, m. a breathing, a complete breath, inspiration and expiration; sg. acc. shwās, 55.

sh^ĕwot^u, m. the six-staged road, i.e. either the six vikāras or the six cakras (see art. shĕh), 82.

shyāma-gal, m. dark-blue-necked, a name of Siva, whose neck was dyed a dark blue by drinking the kālakūta poison at the churning of the ocean; sg. voc. shyāma-galā, 13.

sahaz, adj. inborn, natural, innate; as subst. m. natural character, true nature, reality; hence, obl. sg. sahaza, as adv. naturally, innately, 18 (according to one interpretation), 45; as an epithet of the Supreme Siva, sahaz means 'He who is real and true', 18 (according to another interpretation), 43; sahaza-kusum, a flower of the true nature, i.e. a flower born from one's inner soul, a flower which is a true offering of love; or (?) a flower of reality, a real flower, 21 (see note to the verse).

In Sanskrit, the compound sahaja-vidyā means 'the knowledge, or state of experience, in which the true relation of things is realized'. It is the consciousness of the identity of the Self with Siva. Lallā frequently uses the word sahaz, by itself, with this meaning of 'the nature of Self'. Thus, in 29, she has sahaza-věšār, discrimination as to the nature of Self, and in 30 she has sahaz věbārun, exercise this discrimination as to the nature of Self. From the idea of 'the nature of Self', it comes to mean 'knowledge of the nature of Self'. Thus, in 29, we are told that quietude and self-command are not necessary causes sahazas, i.e. of a knowledge of the nature of Self. Similarly, sahuz has the same meaning in 35 and 62.

Sg. nom. sahaz, 30, 35, 43; dat. sahazas, 29, 62; abl.

and obl. sahaza, 18, 21, 29, 45.

sěkh, f. sand; sg. obl. sěki-lawar, a rope of sand, a rope made by twisting sand, an impossibility, 107.

sukh, m. happiness, ease, K. Pr. 201 (ter).

sakharun, to prepare for a journey, to set out; to set oneself to any task, busy oneself with, 10; impve. sg. 2, sakhar, 10.

sakolu, adj. all, the whole, everything, 38; m. pl. nom. with emph. y, sakaliy, 1, all men, 47 (according to another interpretation, this is sakaliy, 2, below, q. v.).

sakaliy, 2, adv. without having eaten food, hungry and athirst, 47 (see the preceding).

*ul, f. the early time, the time before any fixed time; hence, the propitious time (for doing anything), 99 (= K. Pr. 46), 100. The word often means 'early dawn', and perhaps also has this meaning in these passages.

salil, m. water, 16, 29; sg. dat. salilas, 29.

sōm, m. the moon. The moon plays a considerable part on the mystic side of Saivism, and is frequently mentioned in this connexion in the Lallā-vākyāni. In these verses it appears under four different names, viz. shēshi (25, 40, 69), sōm (34), tandar (9, 22, 109), and tandar ama (93), corresponding, respectively, to the Sanskrit śaśin-, sōma-, candra-, and candramas-. It will be convenient to bring together the various mentions of the moon, and to explain the mystic references thereto.

As explained in the Note on Yōga (§§ 9, 13 ff.), starting from the base of the abdomen,—the mūlādhāra, or sacral plexus,—upwards along the spinal cord there are in the body six cakras, or circles. Over these is the seventh, the sahasrāra, or medulla oblongata (§§ 19, 27). In this sahasrāra, in mystic parlance, is the moon, and also the abode of the Parama Šiva, or Supreme Šiva,—the transcendental realm named Kailāsa or Akula (§ 19). By blocking up the breath in the nādis, while meditating upon this sahasrāra cakra, the Yōgī tries to enter into the highest samādhi, or mental absorption, in which the citta, or organ of thought, is absorbed, microcosmically, into sahasrāra, and, macrocosmically, into Parama Śiva (§ 21).

This is mukti, or final release,—what we should call salvation.

The above explains the reference in L. V. 25, in which the authoress says that by continual suppression of her vital breaths she had cut her way through the six forests (i.e. the cakras), so that the digit of the moon awoke and appeared to her.

Similarly, in 34, she refers to a Yōgī, in whose kanda or bulb (§ 5) the mystic syllable $\bar{o}\dot{m}$ is firmly fixed (§§ 23, 24), and whom the kumbhaka exercise (§ 21) leads to the home of the moon, or sahasrâra. He thus obtains samādhi.

In 69 she says, 'I held the steed of my citta, or thought, by the rein of absence of desire, after much practice having joined together the vital breaths of the ten nādis. Thereupon the digit of the moon (in the sahasrâra) melted and descended upon me, and the nothingness of the transient world became merged in the Nothing.' In the sahasrâra is the Void (§§ 20, 24), in which the empty world of matter becomes merged. The 'melting' of the moon means that the lunar nectar descends, as explained in the following remarks on No. 40.

In 40, the authoress advocates spiritual worship, in which the flowers offered to the object of worship (Siva) are devotion, while over his (mental) image is to stream,—not material water, but—the juice of the digit of the moon (lunar nectar) abiding in the sahasrâra at the top of the vertebral column (§§ 8, 19 ff.). The nectar passes down through the susumnā and idā nādis (§ 8). The Yōgī who is becoming absorbed into sahasrâra drinks this nectar, and becomes master over himself and the kula (see köl) (§ 21). Thus the expression means that he is to devote himself to samādhi by absorption into sahasrâra.

The same ideas are found in No. 9. She states, 'when the sun disappeared, there came the moonlight; when the moon disappeared only citta, or thought, remained. When citta disappeared nothing was left anywhere'. Just as the moon is in the highest cakra, so the sun is in the lowest,—the mūlādhāra, near the perineum (§§ 5, 9). 'Disappeared' means 'ceased to be present in consciousness'. That is to say, the Yōgī raises his consciousness from the mūlādhāra to the sahasrāra (§ 21), the sphere of absolute being. Here the sense of difference between his individual spirit and the Universal Being is sunk in the all-consuming consciousness of All-Being, All-Light.

In 93, there does not appear to be any reference to the moon of mysticism. It is stated that the cit, or pure spirit, is ever new and new, i.e. is ever full of new illusions, just as the natural moon is ever new and new, i.e. perpetually changes as it waxes and wanes.

Similarly, No. 109 presents no difficulty. Lallā states that after much searching she came from the inmost recesses of her soul into the moonlight, meaning either that she came into the light of true knowledge, or that her citta, or organ of thought, became absorbed into sahasrāra, as explained above.

There remains No. 22. This is dealt with in the note on the verse, and what is there said need not be repeated.

Sg. obl. soma-gare, in the home of the moon, or the sahasrâra (see above), 34.

- som^u, adj. equal, alike, 5, 16. Sg. abl. sami brațā, by equal, i.e. by thorough, union, 1; m. pl. nom. samē (m. c. for sāmi), 16.

sübüsas, see satun.

sübüy, see sath 4.

swa, adj. and pron. own; self. This is a Sanskrit word, and occurs only in borrowed Sanskrit compounds. Owing to the fact that wa following a consonant, and u in borrowed words, are both, in Kashmiri, pronounced as ŏ, Lalla frequently makes use of this to effect double meaning. Thus: (28) swa-para-věbar, discrimination on the Self and on the Supreme, or on the Supreme, who is the Self. One of these two is here certainly the correct translation; but the words are also capable of being taken as so-pararětar (i.e. su-para-vicara), discrimination on Him who is excellently Supreme; (36) swa-darshena-myūlu, union with the Self (i.e. God) (brought about by) visiting (holy places), or so-darshena-myūlu, union brought about by the excellent visiting (of holy places); (68) swa-man-hāg, the garden of one's own heart, or.—taking soman as equivalent to the Persian suman,—soman-bag means 'a jasmine-garden'; (98 = K. Pr. 18); $swa-mana-sŏth^u$, the embankment of (the illusions of) one's own mind, or suman-sothu, an embankment with crazy bridges (see sum); (71, 79) swa-větar, discrimination exercised as regards the Self, or so-větar, the good discrimination. Swa- $r\bar{u}ph$, m. own form, i.e. the nature of anything, identity with; thus, (15) kha-swarūph, He who is identical with, or consists of, absolute vacuity, the impersonal Supreme Deity; (67) niza-swarūph, the nature of what is one's own, the nature of Self.

 $s\delta w^u$, adj. plenteous, abounding (of a crop), 66.

savikās, m. that which has wide expansion, the total expanse of creation, the visible creation, 1.

swömī, m. a lord, one who is master or owner; shēn swömī, the owner of the six (attributes of the Deity), 13, see shēh.

sāwun, to cause to sleep, to put to sleep, to lay to sleep; conj. part. sövith, K. Pr. 57.

swar, m. heaven; bhūr, bhuwah, swar, the earth, the atmosphere, and heaven,—i.e. the whole visible universe, 9.

swarg, m. heaven; sg. dat, swargas böji, a possessor of heaven, 62.

swarūph, see swa.

swās or sās, 1 (q.v.), m. ashes, 43.

swātma, m. one's own self; hence, the Self, recognized as identical with the Supreme; sg. dat. swātmas, to the Supreme Self, 61; shēnkar-swātma, Śańkara (i.e. Śiva) recognized as one with Self, 39, 40.

swayam, oneself (borrowed from Sanskrit), 33.

sŏy, suy, see tih.

syund^u, m. the river Sindh, one of the three principal rivers of Kashmīr. Its waters are sacred. syund^u-zal, pl. the waters of the Sindh, 81.

saz, f. fuller's earth, 103.

ta, 1, conj. and, 3, 4, 13, 17, 20, 22, 24, 29, 31, 35 (bis), 37, 39, 41, 44, 48, 52, 56-7, 78-9, 89, 90-1, 94-5, 101-2-3; K. Pr. 18 (bis), 102 (bis); na ta, and not, nor, 96-7; K. Pr. 47, 102; cf. na la under ta, 2; na . . . na . . . ta, not . . . nor . . . nor, 15. A strengthened form of this word is töy, 1, q.v.

ta, 2, conj. then, and then, and next, thereupon (= Hindī tō) (in this sense often scarcely distinguishable from ta, 1), 1, 4, 19, 23, 43, 47, 68, 82, 104; then, and then, thereafter, but, 98; then, so, accordingly, therefore, 21, 30, 33, 42, 46, 51-2, 54, 70, 80-1, 89, 99 (bis), 100; K. Pr. 46 (quater); then, so that, 66; then, and yet, nevertheless, 60; then, used to indicate the apodosis of a conditional or quasiconditional, sentence, 2, 27, 55, 87, or the antecedent clause of a relative clause, 61; often (like the Hindī tō) colouring a whole sentence, but itself hardly translatable, I wonder if, well then, verily, &c., according to the context, 9, 19, 92; na ta (= Hindī nahī tō), otherwise, or else, 19, 71; K. Pr. 150; cf. na ta under ta, 1. A strengthened form of this word is töy, 2, q.v.

ti, conj. (= Hindī bhī) also, 48, 106; K. Pr. 18; even, 32, 48; kēh ti nā, nothing at all, 9, 11; kēh ti nā, nothing at all, 90; kāth ti nā sath, no substance at all, 41; kõh ti na khěth, no harm at all, 77; tō ti (Hindī tau bhī), even then, 29.

 $t\bar{o}_{i} = ta$, 2, in $t\bar{o}$ ti (Hindī tau $bh\bar{i}$), even then, 29. $t\bar{o}d^{i}$, see $t\bar{o}r^{u}$.

taday, adv. then only, then and not till then, 7.7.

tagun, conj. 2, to be known how to be done, to be possible. This verb is used as a potential verb, the ability always being mental, not physical (cf. the Sanskrit tajjñāna-, by which pandits translate this word); tih yës tagi, to whom that is possible, i.e. he who knows how to do that, 24; tih yës karun tagi, to whom the doing that is possible, he who knows how to do that, 37. If it is desired to indicate physical possibility the verb hekun (q.v.) must be used.

tih, pronoun of the third person, he, 5, 6, 8, 20, 24, 27, 31 (bis), 33-4, 37 (bis), 43 (bis), 65, 71-2, 76, 105; she; it, 70; K. Pr. 46 (bis); substantival demonstrative pronoun that, 20-1, 37, 57 (bis), 69, 75, 90, 94, 107; adjectival demonstrative pronoun, 3, 15, 25, 28 (bis), 34, 47, 52 (bis), 77, 81, 104; sometimes used substantively, but treated as an adjective (see below), 2, 12-13, 58 (bis), 94.

This pronoun is either animate or inanimate, and the animate forms may be either masculine or feminine. The inanimate forms are of common gender. Moreover, as seen above, there is a cross-division, according as it is used substantively or adjectivally. We shall consider the sub-stantival forms first.

As an animate substantival pronoun, the following forms occur:—

masc. sg. nom. suh, he, 8, 24, 31, 33; with emph. y, suy, he only, he verily, 31, 34, 37.

dat. tas, to him, 20, 34, 37, 105; with emph. i, tasi, to him only, 65.

gen. (m. sg. nom.) $tasond^u$; with emph. y, tasonduy, his only, 72.

ag. tam^i , by him; with emph. y, tamiy, by him alone, by him verily, 5, 43 (bis).

pl. nom. and acc. tim, they, 6; them, 76: with emph. y, timay, they alone, 27.

gen. (m. sg. nom.) $tihond^u$, their, 71.

There is no occurrence of the feminine pronoun used substantively in the songs.

As an inanimate substantival pronoun, we have the following:—

sg. nom. and acc. tih, it, that, 24, 37, 70, 107; with emph. y, tiy, 20, 21.

dat. tath, to it, K. Pr. 46 (bis).

abl. tawa, by that; used adverbially to mean 'for that reason', 'on that account', 'therefore', 57 (bis); with emph. y, taway, therefore, 69, 90, 94; by that means, 75.

pl. nom.; with emph. y, timay, those very, 13.

Used as an animate pronominal adjective, the following forms occur. They are the same as the corresponding substantival forms:—

m. sg. nom., with emph. y, suy, that very (god), 15.

pl. nom. tim, those (rams), 77.

f. sg. nom. $s\check{o}h$; with emph. y, $s\check{o}y$, (I am) only that (Lal), 81.

When used as an inanimate pronominal adjective, the substantival forms tih and tiy of the nominative are not used, the animate substantival forms (m. suh, suy; f. sŏh, sŏy) being used instead. On the other hand, the inanimate substantival form of the dative, tath, is also used as an adjective. Thus:—

m. sg. nom. snh, that (wine), 104; with emph. y, sny, that very (time) 3, (spell) 34.

dat. tath, in that (lake), 47.

abl, tami; with emph. y, tamiy, at that very (time), 25.

pl. acc. tim, those (foods), 28; those (garments), 28.

f. sg. nom. soy, that very (stone), 52 (bis).

As regards the use of the substantival forms of this pronoun, as semi-adjectives, this consists in the use of suh, suy, soh, or soy, instead of tih or tiy, when referring to something inanimate. This occurs:—

- (1) When the substantival pronoun is the antecedent to an adjectival relative pronoun. The antecedent, although a substantive, is then treated also as an adjective. Thus:— yih yih karm korum, suh artun, whatever act I performed, that was worshipping (God), 58. Here the relative yih yih, whatever, is an adjective, and therefore suh (the adjectival form of the antecedent) is used, and not tih, the substantival form. On the other hand, if the relative is inanimate and substantival, the inanimate substantival form, tih, is used for the antecedent. Thus, in the next line of the same verse, we have yih wöttorum, tiy manthar, what I uttered, that verily was a mystic invocation.
- (2) In a copulative sentence, when the subject is a pronoun, this, although substantival, is treated as an adjective in agreement with the complement. Thus, (2) suy (not tiy) wŏpadēsh, that alone is the instruction; (12) suy (not tiy) chuy jñān, that alone is (true) knowledge; (58) suy yih tanthar, that alone is this scripture; (94) suy gauv wākh, that became the (mystic) word.

thüjü, f. (this word is a feminine diminutive of thal), a small place; esp. a small sacred cella or small wooden temple, in which an image of a god and other appurtenances of worship are kept; sg. nom. (m. c.) thajī, 33.

trah, card. three, 16, 75; trayi něngi, adv. three times, 50. The modern form of this word is trěh or trih. There are three impurities (mala) of the soul, which impede its final release (75). These are called āṇava, māyīya, and kārmu. The first, āṇava, is the state or character of the soul deeming itself to be finite (the soul being looked upon as a very minute entity, aṇu), the second, māyīya, is that born of cosmic illusion, or the belief that one thing is different from another, and the third, kārma, is the impurity that results from action or 'works' (which may be good or bad). See Note on Yōga, § 24.
