PREFACE.

THIS Abridgment has been made by Mr. John Robson, B.A., under the superintendence of Dr. Smith. The leading features of the Work are:—

1. Full explanations of the forms, meanings, and syntactical constructions of all words employed by the classical authors usually read in schools, and whose names are given in the first list appended to this Preface.

2. The sufficient illustration of these points by quotations from the Classics.

3. The insertion in every case of the name of at least one author by whom the word is employed.

4. An exhibition of the etymological affinities of words, chiefly within the limits of the Latin language itself, but frequently extending beyond it to the cognate languages, especially Greek.

5. The insertion at the end of the articles of such Italian, French, and occasionally Spanish derivatives, as have undergone changes which conceal to some extent their parentage.

It is obvious, therefore, that the plan of this Work differs widely from that of any School Latin Dictionary hitherto published in this country; and it is believed to be more in accordance with the actual state of philology, and to be better adapted to meet the requirements of enlightened teachers than those adopted in previous works of a similar kind. How far the execution of this plan may deserve the approbation of scholars, it is for them, of course, to decide; but it may be truly stated that no care or labour has been spared to render the work practically useful, by clearness of arrangement and of typography, by minute accuracy, by completeness, and by intelligibility. On each of these points the following explanatory statements may be made.

One of the principal difficulties experienced by school-boys in using a Dictionary is the selection of the particular signification required in each passage, from the frequently numerous meanings assigned to a word. This difficulty to some extent, no doubt, arises from the very nature of the case, and is so far unavoidable; but it is greatly increased by the utter want of arrangement observable in most School Dictionaries, in which all the significations of a word are usually printed together, undistinguished in any way from one another, and placed without regard to any principle either etymological or logical, while nothing, or next to nothing, in the shape of illustrative quotations, is inserted. The pupil naturally therefore assumes that it is a matter of indifference which signification he chooses from the mass so presented to him; and hence, as involving the least trouble, the first is the one usually taken, whether it be right or wrong. Whatever can be done in a Dictionary to counteract this evil has, it will be seen, been attempted in this Work; the various meanings, uses, and constructions of words being carefully and clearly separated, so as to be evident at a mere glance; and thus even the most thoughtless will be prevented from assuming that any meaning may be taken indifferently. It is undeniable, however, that the proper use of a Dictionary is by no means an easy thing; and it is to be regretted that teachers generally take little or no pains to assist their pupils in this respect: a few hours devoted to the explanation and illustration of the proper method of using a Dictionary would be of the greatest possible service to boys, and at the same time yield an abundant reward to the teacher.

With respect to typographical accuracy, it may be stated that the Abridgment was made from the corrected pages of the larger work, on the revision of which unusual pains were bestowed, and it has itself been very carefully read while going through the press; so that it is anticipated that very few typographical errors will be discovered. Great care has also been taken in reference to the quantities, which are accurately marked throughout.

The completeness of this Dictionary consists in its containing all the words found in the writings of the authors whom it professes to explain. In ordinary School Dictionaries no principle appears to have been followed as to the class of words which are admitted or rejected; and thus it frequently happens, even in the best modern works of this kind, as for instance in that of Ingerslev,* that words used by such authors as Gellius and Seneca are inserted, while others employed by Cicero and Virgil are omitted. It is confidently believed that this Dictionary contains every word which a young scholar is likely to meet with in the course of his reading: but it seemed worse than useless to encumber the Work with words, an explanation of which will never be wanted by the persons for whom the book is designed. By omitting such words, not only is the mechanical use of the Work (an important point in a Dictionary) greatly facilitated, but space has been gained for a full explanation of the words inserted, and for the illustration of their meanings and constructions by quotations from the ancient writers. But while this Dictionary is mainly intended to explain the writings of the authors comprised in the first list only, yet it contains many words and meanings of words which do not occur in such authors, but a knowledge of which is necessary for the full understanding of other words and meanings of words which are met with in their works. Hence the names of many authors never read by young students will be found in this book; these are collected in the second list of proper names appended to this Preface.

In preparing this Work, it has constantly been borne in mind that it is intended principally for the use of young scholars; and hence great attention has been paid to the intelligibility and simplicity of all the definitions and explanations. The grammatical portion is taken entire from the larger Dictionary, and the nomenclature adopted throughout is that which is most in accordance with modern philology, and which is both more philosophical and more intelligible than that which still keeps its place in many Grammars.

* The Latin-German School Dictionary of Dr. Ingerslev, which was published at Brunswick in 1853, is perhaps the best work of the kind that has yet appeared in Germany; and every thing of real value which it contains will be found incorporated in the present Work.

The Appendix of Proper Names has been added rather in compliance with custom than because it was considered of much real utility; since the necessary brevity of the notices it contains quite precludes the giving of anything like full or satisfactory information; and in many cases these incomplete statements are liable to suggest erroneous inferences. Still great pains have been taken to state nothing positively incorrect; but the Classical Dictionaries must be consulted by those who require more detailed information. It may be stated that the references in the body of the Work to 'Smith's Antiquities' are to the second edition of the Smaller Dictionary of Antiquities.

In conclusion, the attention of teachers is directed to the facilities which this Dictionary affords for that method of studying the Latin language, which is at once the most philosophical, most interesting, and most expeditious, namely, the etymological or analytical. By placing hyphens between the prefixes and the roots, and by giving the roots separately whenever the process of combination has given rise to any euphonic change, the pupil is here furnished with means which will enable him, if properly assisted, to trace without difficulty the connection of compound and derived words with their roots: he will thus obtain an insight into the constructive principles of the language, the comprehension of which will not only incalculably diminish the labour and lighten the drudgery of mastering its vocabulary, but will also lay the foundation of a knowledge of comparative philology, and, through it, of other branches of science of the highest value.

A SMALLER

LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

A, indecl. f. (sc. litera), oftener n. the first letter of the Latin alphabet. At the end of words it is usually short, except in the numerals, trigintā to nonagintā, and in Abl. of nouns and Imper. of verbs. In compds. a long by nature generally remains unchanged: labor, delābor; a short i. roots is changed into i, and that even where in secondary forms it becomes long by position: făcio, efficio; frango (from frāg), perfringo; a in roots long by position is changed into e: scando, descendo. Sometimes it remains unchanged: pătiens, impătiens. As an abbreviation A = Aulus, while Appius is written App. On the voting tablets in the Comitia, A. (i. e. Antiquo) denoted the rejection of the proposed law; but in judicial trials A. = Absolvo, whence A is called littera salutaris. In dates A. D. = ante diem (v. ante). A. U. C. = anno ab urbe condita.

ăb, ā, or abs, prep. with abl. A is used instead of ab before many of the nouns beginning with consonants; but before h as well as before vowels ab is always used. Abs occurs chiefly in compds.; but in old writers abs te, abs quo are met with. In composition, ab remains unchanged before vowels. Before m and p, it becomes ā, a-moveo, a-verto. In the perfect tenses of sum, both ab and a are found; ab-fuit, a-fuit. Before fero and fugio, ab becomes au, au-fero, au-fugio. Before p, c, q, t, abs, or the shortened form as, is used, as abs-condo, abs-tineo, as-porto.

Ab denotes, I. The point of departure, the source and origin: 2. Separation or distance. 3. Proximity.

A. Space. I. Implying motion from a place or point without reference to the space traversed: me a portu praemisit, he sent me on before from the harbour, Plaut. Hence with verbs of separation or removal, as abducere, mittere, discedere, etc. Paululum a sole, a little out of the sun, Cic. II. With reference to the space passed over: strengthened with usque (even to, all the way through, v. usque): ab imis unguibus usque ad verticem summum, from his toe nails even to his very crown, Cic. III. Without the idea of motion, to designate distance, or separation, with the verbs distare, abesse, and with the particles procul, longe, etc.: non amplius pedum millibus duobus ab castris, Caes. Also to denote the measure of the distance: a millibus passuum quindecim, at a distance of 15 miles, Caes. IV. Implying proximity: expressed by at, on, in, etc., ab decumana porta, at the main entrance, Caes. So, a tergo, a latere, a fronte, ab occasu, ab oriente; esp. in geog. descriptions: Gallia ab Sequanis et Helvetiis adtingit Rhenum, at the parts occupied by, Caes.

B. Time, analogous to the relations of space. I. Without reference to the period subsequently elapsed; After: ab re divina, after the sacrifice, Pl. II. With reference to a subsequent period: From . . . to: a mane ad noctem usque, from morning to night, Pl.: ab sole orto in multum diei, from sun-rise till late in the day, Liv. III. To designate the distance of one point of time from another: From, since, after: centesima lux ab interitu Clodii, since the death of Clodius, Cic.: ab urbe condita, since the foundation of Rome. IV. Denoting proximity, At: ab initio, a primo, a principio, etc at the beginning, at first.

C. In other relations, ab denotes, as in Space and Time (but figuratively), departure from, separation, or distance and proximity: I. Employed before words representing either the agents, or the causes of effects denoted by verbs. From, by, by means of: a patre laudari; ab aliquo discere, cognoscere, accidere, etc.: 2. With names of towns instead of gentile adj., to denote origin: a Cora atque Pometia liberos, Liv. 3. In etymologies: eam rem illi putant a suum cuique tribuendo appellatam, ego a legendo, Cic. 4. To denote the motive, instead of ex, propter, or the simple abl. causae: From, out of: linguam ab irrisu exserentem, out of derision, Liv. 5. Dolere, laborare, valere ab, instead of the simple Abl.: doleo ab animo, doleo ab oculis, doleo ab aegritudine, Pl. 6. With verbs of expecting, fearing, hoping, etc., ab = a parte: hence timere, metuere ab aliquo, does not mean to fear any one, but, to fear something from him: metui a Chryside, I feared some mischief from her, Ter. 7. Implying the separation of a part from the whole, out of, for ex: scuto ab novissimis uni militi detracto, Caes. 8. The origin, adverbially, a se = sua sponte, of one's own accord, spontaneously, Cic. ☞ Denoting departure from, or avoidance of. Hence, 1. where beginning and repeating are implied: a summo bibere, to drink in succession down the table: a cauda de ovo exire, tail foremost, Plin.: a minumo ad maximum, from the smallest to the greatest, Pl. 2. With verbs of freeing from or protecting against anything: expiandum forum ab illis sceleris vestigiis, Cic.: hence, perhaps, ulcisci se ab aliquo, to take vengeance on one, Plin. 3. With verbs of deterring, intermitting, desisting, ceasing; deterrere, intermittere, desistere, etc.: ab injuria deterrere, Cic. III. Denoting separation (without the idea of proceeding or departure), analogous (fig.) to A. III. and B. III. distance in order, rank, mind, or feeling; with secundus, tertius, etc.; with alter, alius, alienus, diversus, etc.: quartus ab Arcesila the fourth from Arcesilas, Cic.: secundus a rege, next in rank to the king, B. Alex. Also in the phrase, non ab re, sc. alienum, not without profit or advantage: which, however, is not used by Cicero. IV. Denoting proximity: 1. Hence it occurs in phrases such as, to stand by, be on the part of, Stare, facere, sentire, esse ab aliquo, to be on one's side, to belong to his party: a nobis facere, in our favour, Cic.: vir ab innocentia clementissimus, on the side of innocence, id. Hence to distinguish philosophical sects: nostri illi a Platone et Aristotele, the adherents of the Plat. and Aristotel. philosophy, Cic.

2. Ab defines more exactly than the simple abl. the respect in which anything is to be understood, in relation to, on the part of: orba ab optimatibus contio, Cic. 3. With verbs of fastening and holding: funiculus a puppi religatus, id. 4. Subsequently to the Aug. age words dependent on ab were employed to denote office and dignity with or without servus: a manu servus, a secretary, Suet.

D. In composition with verbs ab denotes removal, disappearance, absence: aufero, carry away: abutor, use up: absum, be absent. In composition with adjectives ab denotes absence, difference: as amens, without mind, mad: absonus, out of tune or time: absimilis, unlike, irregular (Key, § 1; 104.)

ăcūtus, a, um, part. [acuo] sharpened; also, A. adj. sharp, pointed: ac. culter, Pl.: acutissimis vallis, Caes. 2. Fig. of objects affecting the senses: sharp, acute, violent, severe: ictus sonitus effundit acutos, sharp or treble notes, Hor.: ac. odor, ac. sapor, etc., Plin.: ac. sol, scorching, Hor. Subst. acuta, orum, n. plu., ac. belli, the perils of war, id. 3. Of intellectual qualities: acute, intelligent, sagacious: homo ac. magis quam eruditus, Cic. Hence, Fig. ac. nares, a fine nose, Hor.

ăcȳlos, i, f. the acorn of the holm-oak (ilex), Plin.

ăd, prep. with Acc. for euphony sometimes written at. Anciently, ar, e. g. arvcho, arbiter, arcesso (q. v.) So: ar me advenias, Pl.: and in Inscripti. arfuerunt, arfuisse. As antith. to ab (as in to ex), ad denotes, first, direction towards an object either without or with motion; then the reaching of or attaining to it; and, finally, the being at or near it.

A. In space: I. Direction towards without motion: to, towards: often of geog. position, with the verbs jacere, vergere, spectare, etc.: Gallia vergit ad septemtriones, Caes. II. Direction towards with motion, and either with or without the idea of arrival, towards, to, against: ad quemvis numerum equitum quamvis pauci adire audent, id. 2. With the idea of arrival: to, even to, with or without usque: usque ad castra hostium accessit, Caes.: quum sudor ad imos manaret talos, Hor. Fig. deverberasse usque ad necem, Ter. Without usque: virgis ad necem caedi, Cic. Hence the whole space traversed is indicated by the words dependent on ab and ad; the former marking the point of departure, the second that of arrival. Ad me, te, etc. = domum meam, tuam, etc.: te oro, ut ad me Vibonem statim venias, Cic. Sometimes domum is expressed: neque domum unquam ad me litteras mittam, id. A proper name is similarly employed: magni domum concursus ad Atramium fiebant, to the house of Atramius, Caes. Ad, with the name of a deity in the Gen., is elliptical for ad templum or aedem: ad Opis, Cic.: ad Vestae, Hor. With names of towns, ad is used with verbs of motion, instead of the simple Acc. profectus sum ad Capuam, quintoque anno post ad Tarentum, Cic. Ad is always used when the name is joined with another subst.: ad Cirtam oppidum iter constituunt, Sall. Both constr. are used by the poets: ad doctas proficisci cogor Athenas, Prop.: doctas jam nunc eat, inquit, Athenas, Ov. III. Proximity = apud: near to, by, at, among: sol quasi flagitator astat usque ad ostium, stands like a dun continually at the door, Pl.: ad forum esse, to be at the market, id. Hence, ad laevam or sinistram (sc. manum, partem), adverb. on the left hand, on the left, Ter.: and with an ordinal number: cum plebes ad tertium milliarium consedisset, at the third milestone, Cic. Ad urbem esse, was said of generals encamped outside the gates of Rome until permission was given for a triumph; and also of those appointed to military or provincial commands, just previously to their setting out to enter upon their duties, Cic. Even of persons: among, before = apud: ad judices sic agi solet, id. Frequently with proper names of places: ad Veios terror multiplex erat, Liv.: especially with the word pugna: pugna ad Trebiam, ad Trasimenum, ad Cannas, etc.

B. In time, analogous to the relations II. and III. in A. I. Direction towards, i. e. approach to a definite point of time: about, towards: domum reductus ad vesperum, about evening, Cic. II. The limit to which a space of time extends, with or without usque: until, even to, up to: usque ad hanc aetatem, Pl.: Sophocles ad sum. manum senectutem tragoedias fecit, Cic. Hence the whole period is defined by the words dependent on ab, or ab usque, and ad; the former marking its beginning, the latter its end: ab hora fere quarta usque ad solis occasum, Caes. III. A point of time either past or future: at, on, in, by: ad horam destinatam, at the appointed hour, Cic.

C. The relations of number I. An approximation to a certain sum: near, almost, about (Fr. près de, à peu près, presque, etc.): ad quadraginta eam posse emi minas, Pl.: also sometimes with quasi: quasi ad quadraginta minas, id.: sane frequentes fuimus omnino ad ducentos, Cic. In the histl. and post-Aug. authors ad is added adverbially in this sense; occisis ad hominum millibus quatuor, Caes. II. The terminus, the limit: to, even to (rare): eodem Junonis ad partem dimidiam detegit, even to the half, Liv.: ad assem, to the last farthing, Hor. The phrase ad unum omnes, or simply ad unum, means all together, all without exception: omnes ad unum idem sentiunt, Cic. III. An addition: ad Faleriorum Pyrrhive proditorem, tertium transfugis documentum esset, a third example to deserters, in addition to the traitors of Falerii and of Pyrrhus, Liv.

D. In all the manifold relations of one object to another. I. With verbs which imply a reference to any one, or which denote something done for him: as those of giving, sending, informing, submitting, etc., ad with acc. is frequently used in a sense different from that of the Dat. in connection with the same verbs: literas dare ad aliquem = to send or write one a letter: but literas dare alicui = to give a letter to one, i. e. into his own hands: ad me ex Aegypto litteras misit, Cic. Hence mittere or scribere librum ad aliquem, to dedicate a book to one: quae institueram, ad te mittam, id. So in titles of books: M. Tulli Ciceronis ad Marcum Brutum Orator, etc. In the titles of odes and epigrams ad aliquem signifies to, addresse to, and in aliquem, against one. But there is often no distinction between a Dat. and ad with an Acc.: ad Q. Fulvium Hirpini dederunt sese, Liv. II. with regard to, in respect of, as to. 1. With verbs: ad omnia alia aetate sapimus rectius, in respect to all other things we grow wiser by age, Ter. 2. With adjectives: where ad = for, of, to: ad rationem solertiamque praestantior, Cic.: locum ad egrediendum idoneum, Caes. 3.

With substantives: mentis ad omnia caecitas, Cic. So with the Gerund instead of the Gen. of the same: facultas ad scribendum, id. Applied to persons, ad sometimes = adversus, against: ad senem aliquam fabricam fingit, Ter.

III. The standard or rule to which anything is referred: agreeably to, according to, after: ad istorum normam sapientes, Cic. Ad speciem has several meanings: 1. in the manner of: ad urbium speciem, Suet. 2. for show, display: ad speciem vetustatis, Cic. 3. for appearance' sake: paucis ad speciem tabernaculis relictis, Caes. Also where the model or rule is likewise the cause, according to, in consequence of: ad horum preces, on their entreaty, Liv. IV. To denote, 1. an aim or purpose: haec juventutem ad facinora incendebant, Sall.: this use of ad is very common with the gerund: alere canes ad venandum, Ter. Hence, instead of an adj. to designate a profession: miles ad naves, a marine, Liv.: servi ad remum = remiges = oarsmen, id.: ad lecticam homines, litter-bearers, charmen, Catull. 2. Fitness or adaptation; to, for: genera herbarum ad morsus bestiarum, etc., Cic. V. To denote comparison (from the idea of proximity or juxtaposition): ad sapientiam hujus ille (Thales) nimius nugator fuit, in comparison with this man's wisdom, Pl.

E. Adverbial phrases with ad. I. Ad omnia, withal, to crown all, Liv. II. Ad hoc and ad haec = praeterea, insuper: moreover, besides: ad hoc, quos manus atque lingua perjurio aut sanguine civili alebat, Sall. III. Ad id quod, besides that (very rare), Liv. IV. Ad me, te, rem, etc. concerning me, thee, the matter, etc.: nihil ad me (sc. attinet), that is nothing to me: nihil ad haec, that is not to the purpose, etc. V. Ad tempus: at a definite, fixed time, Cic.: at a fit, appropriate time, Caes.: for some, or a short time, Cic.: according to circumstances, id. VI. Ad praesens: for the moment, for a short time, id.: at present, now, Tac. Ad praesentiam is similarly used, id. VII. Ad locum, on the spot, Liv. VIII. Ad verbum, word for word, literally, by heart, Cic. IX. Ad summam: on the whole, in general, id.: in a word, in short, id. X. Ad extremum, ad ultimum, ad postremum: at the end, finally: (a) Of place: at the extremity, etc.: ad extremum, inde ferrum exstabat, Liv. (β) Of time: at last, Cic. Hence (γ) Of order: finally, lastly = denique, id. 2. In Liv., wholly, quite = omnino. XI. Ad unguem, lit. to a nail; hence, exactly, accurately: ad unguem factus homo, a polished man, Hor.

F. Ad is sometimes placed after its substantive: senatus, quos ad soleret, referendum censuit, Cic.

G. In composition. According to the usual orthography, the d of ad remains unchanged before vowels, and before b, d, h, m, v: adbibo, adduco, adhibeo, admoveo, advenio; it is assimilated to c, f, g, l, n, p, r, s, t: accipio, affligo, aggero, allabor, annumero, appello, arripio, assumo, attineo; before g and s it sometimes disappears: agnosco, aspicio, asto; and before qu it passes into c: acquiro, acquiesco. II. Signif.: Ad in composition with verb denotes: 1. motion to: accedere, to step up to. 2. additum: accedere to be added. 3. nearness: assidere to sit near. 4. assent, favour: acclamare, to express assent by acclamation, to cheer. 5. near completion: accidere, to cut all but through. 6. at, in consequence of: arrigere, raise (on hearing or seeing anything). It also denotes the beginning of an action or condition, as, addormire, to fall asleep, and intensity, as, adamare, to love passionately ădactĭo, ōnis, f. [adigo] lit. a bringing or driving to, hence compulsion, Liv.

ădactus, a, um, Part. of adigo, q. v.

aut, conj. from alterum (one of two, not both) or: introduces an alternative regarded objectively as a fact: vel, from volo, also implies an alternative, but viewed as still to be chosen, and therefore dependent on the will; that is considered subjectively. Hence in many cases either aut or vel may be used, according to the point of view from which the subject is regarded: e. g. satis esse causae arbitrabatur quare in Dumnorigem aut ipse animadverteret, aut civitatem animadvertere juberet, Caes. Here Caesar contemplates the alternatives as hypothetical facts: petit ut vel ipse de eo statuat, vel civitatem statuere jubeat, ib. In this passage the same alternatives are stated, but from a different point of view, viz., as left to the choice of Divitiacus. Aut (or aut . . . aut, for there is no essential distinction between the two cases, since aut may always be understood at the beginning of the former clause) introduces an alternative the acceptance or admission of which implies the rejection or denial of the connected alternative; but whether the co-existence of the alternatives is possible or not is indicated by the context: truncis arborum aut admodum firmis ramis abscisis, trunks of trees, or (if they were not to be had) very stout branches, Caes. II. In logical arguments, however, aut introduces an alternative inconsistent with another alternative, so that both propositions cannot be true: its most frequent employment in this way is in those arguments called dilemmas: omnia bene sunt ei dicenda, qui hoc se posse profitetur, aut eloquentiae nomen relinquendum est, Cic. 2. In two disjunctive phrases: res ipsa et reipublicae tempus aut me ipsum, quod nolim, aut alium quempiam aut invitabit aut dehortabitur, id. 3. In negative clauses for neque . . . neque: ne aut ille alserit, aut uspiam ceciderit aut perfregerit aliquid, Ter. 4. In interrogations: quaesivit num ille aut ille defensurus esset, Cic. III. In a limiting sense, to subjoin something less important: or at least: submersas obrue puppes, aut age diversas, Virg.: quaero, num injuste aut improbe fecerit, or at least unfairly, Cic. IV. Only in the poets, neque . . . aut sometimes takes the place of neque . . . neque: neque ego hanc abscondere furto speravi, ne finge, fugam: nec conjugis unquam praetendi taedas, aut haec in foedera veni, Virg. V. The poets connect by aut . . . vel, vel . . . aut, instead of aut . . . aut, or vel . . . vel (in prose writers the two particles are never connected): tellus aut hisce, vel istam, quae facit ut laedar, mutando perde figuram, Ov. VI. In connection with other particles: 1. Aut etiam: quid ergo aut hunc prohibet, aut etiam Xenocratem, Cic. 2. Aut certe: ac video hanc primam ingressionem meam aut reprehensionis aliquid, aut certe admirationis habituram, id. 3. Aut vero for connecting a more important thought: or indeed, or truly: quem tibi aut hominem, aut vero deum, auxilio futurum putas? id. 4. Aut ne . . . quidem: ego jam aut rem, aut ne spem quidem exspecto, id. 5. Aut quidem: Suet. VII. Aut . . . aut = partim . . . partim: partem planitiae aut Jovis templum aut oppidum tenet, Liv. (Hence Ital. o; Fr. ou.) autem, conj. [v. aut] (never used at the beginning of a clause): again, moreover: unum (iter) angustum et difficile erat: mons autem altissimus impendebat, Caes. 2. It frequently marks a transition with a more or less emphatic contrast: again, on the other hand, but: lego autem libentissime, Cic. II. When a word is repeated from a previous clause, in continuing a train of thought: nunc quod reliquum, agamus: agitur autem, liberine vivamus, an mortem obeamus, id. III. = sed, vero, igitur, etc., in resuming a train of thought interrupted by a parenthesis: princeps omnium virtutum illa sapientia, quam σοφίαν Graeci vocant — (prudentia enim, quam Graeci φρόνησιν, aliam quandam intelligimus, quae est rerum expetendarum fugiendarumque scientia), illa autem sapientia, quam principem dixi, etc., id. IV. In connecting a parentnetical clause itself: quae autem nos ut recta aut recte facta dicamus, si placet (illi autem appellant κατορθώματα) omnes numeros virtutis continent, id. V. In arguments, to indicate the steps by which the conclusion is reached: aut hoc, aut illud: hoc autem non, igitur illud. B.

B, b, indecl. n., denotes the soft labial sound between v and p: as a labial it is connected with v, p, f, and m: while as a medial it is the correlative of g and d. It is used in words formed to express certain natural sounds, as in balare, barrire, boare, bombitare, etc. The Romans probably gave the sound p in many cases where they wrote b, especially when the b was final, as in ab, ob, sub, or when these preps. were used in comp., as before c, p, and f, when no assimilation took place in writing. Quintilian says "quum dico obtinuit secundam b literam ratio poscit, aures magis audiunt p:" so sometimes scribtus is found instead of scriptus. Hence we find variations between bs and ps: b seems to have been retained when it belonged to the root of the word, as plebs, urbs; except in the verbal forms nupsi, scripsi, where p was gen. preferred. Still there are var. cf. Absyrtus and Apsyrtus, opsonium and obsonium: gen., however, the Gr. ψ was rendered by ps.

‖ B is interchanged with other labials. 1. With v: ferbui and fervi; sebum and sevum: thus the Latin b is often changed into v in Ital., Fr., and Sp., as habere, avere, avoir, etc. So also the MSS. often vary between bixit and vixit, rene for bene, and so on. Allied to this is the interchange of b with du, dv or dw, as bonus for duonus, bellum for duellum, bis for duis; Sans. dwis. 2. With p: καρπασος, carbasus; πύξος, buxus; πύργος, burgus; Germ. burg; poplicus was afterwards publicus, and Ennius wrote Burrus for Pyrrhus. 3. With f: ἀμφω, ambo; ὀρφ-ανός (later ὀρφός) orbus; so rubeo and rufus. 4. With m: βροτος, mortalis: still more freq b is inserted between m and a liquid, as cumulare; Fr. combler: numerus; Fr. nombre, etc. ‖ B is interchanged, though rarely, with gutturals: with g, ch, c; Sans. gô, Lat. bos: χολή, Eng. gall, Lat. bilis: Sucara was an older form of Sabura, and cafo is found for bifo. ‖ In Inscr. B gen. denotes bonus or bene: thus B. D. = Bona Dea; B. M. = Bene Merenti. Sometimes it stands for Beneficiarius, and B. F. for Beneficiarii.

C.

C, the third letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponded originally in sound to the Greek Γ. The Duilian inscription gives LECIONES for legiones; and even to the latest times C. and Cn. stood for Gaius and Gnaeus. But from an early period there was a tendency to give to C the sound of K: in inscriptions Consul is represented by the abbreviation Cos. not Kos; and K was retained as a written symbol only before a, as in KAL for Calendae and Calumnia. However, it seems undoubted that as long as Latin remained uncorrupted, C retained the hard sound of K, even before the vowels i and e. ‖ Interchanges of C with other letters: C and G: vicesimus, tricesimus, etc. rest on better authority than vigesimus, trigesimus, etc.: in It. and Sp. such words as amicus, secundus, are amigo, segundo. With s both C and G form x; dico, dixi; rego, rexi. 2. C and H: h becomes c in traho, tractus; veho, vectus: and hs like cs form x: traho, traxi; veho, vexi. 3. C and T: we find Basculi and Bastuli, Vectones and Vettones: cf. nux (root, nuc) and Eng. nut.

4. C and P: πέπτω, coquo: λείπω, linquo: and vice versa, λύκος, lupus: so columba and palumba. 5. C interchanged with other labials: with b, see letter B: with v or w: focus, foveo: nix, nivis: conniveo, connixi: vivo, vixi: Dacus, Davus. ‖‖ Changes of C in the Romance languages: 1. D.

D, d, the fourth letter of the Latin alphabet, corresponding, both in sound and in place, to the Greek Delta (Δ). It is the medial dental, being most closely connected with t, the thin dental; and less closely with the other medial mutes, b and g. I. Interchanges of D with other letters. 1. D and T. At the end of words t was frequently substituted for it in early times; hence some modern editors write at for ad, aput for apud, etc. T and d are interchanged also in the derivation of words: e. g. from mentior comes mendax, from quattuor quadraginta, etc. 2. Du and B. At the beginning of words, du followed by a vowel has been changed into b: e. g.: duellum, bellum; duis, bis; duonus, bonus. In some cases, the d has been dropped, and the vowel with which it was connected slightly modified: e. g.: duiginti became viginti; Dianus, Janus. 3. D and R: e. g.: auris, audio; ar, ad; apor, apud. 4. D and L: e. g.: pando, palam; scando, scala; dacrima, lacrima; Ὀδυσσεύς, Ulixes; sedes, sella; mando, mala. 5. D and S: e. g.: ῥόδον, rosa; μέσος, medius; so the Sabine name Clausus became Claudius. 6. In compound words, d at the end of the first portion of the compound is generally assimilated to the initial consonant of the second portion with which it comes in contact: e. g.: ac-cedo; af-ficio; ag-gredior; al-ludo; ap-parare ar-rigo; assidere. So quip-piam for quid-piam; quic-quam for quid-quam. When in such cases, d is followed by s and another consonant, it is omitted altogether: e. g. a-scendo, a-stringo. The same thing takes place when d is followed by the nasal gn: e. g.: a-gnatus, a-gnosco. 7. In inflection d is either omitted before s, or (rarely) assimilated: e. g.: custos for custod-s: lae-si, for laed-si: but ces-si, for ced-si. II. Changes of D in the Romance languages: 1. D into Z, especially di into z: e. g.: Lat. ardens, pendulus, It. arzente, penzolo; Lat. medius, radius, It. mezzo, razzo. 2. Di into G or J: e. g.: Lat. hodie, It. oggi; Lat. dies, diurnus, Fr. jour. 3. D into L: e. g.: Lat. caducus, cicada, hedera, It. caluco, cicala, ellera. 4. D into R (rare): e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis, Sp. lampara. 5. D into N: e. g.: Lat. lampas, lampadis, It. lampana; Lat. perdix, It. pernice. 6. Omission of D: (i) in French, between two vowels: e. g.: Lat. audire, gladius, fides, nudus, videre, Fr. ouir, glaive, foi, nu, voir. (ii) In Italian at the end of words: e. g.: Lat. ad, apud, modo, fidēs, It. a, appo, mò, fè. III. In the oldest period of the language, the ablat. sing. ended in d: MARĪD, DICTATORED, IN ALTOD MARĪD, on the Col. Rostr. 2. Several prepositions and other prefixes originally ended in d, which d was afterwards usually dropped: e. g. prod in prod-ire, prod-esse: red in red-ire, red-dere; sed in sed-itio: IV. As an abbreviation, D usually stands for the praenomen Decimus; also for Deus, Divus, Dominus, Decurio, etc.; in epitaphs, D. M. = Diis Manibus.

N.B. The use of the symbol D as the representative of 500 is a modern corruption: the original mark was the half of the original Tuscan numeral Ⓘ or CIↃ = 1000, which printers have found it convenient to represent by D.

dē, prep. with ablat. denotes the departure or removal of an object from a thing to which it was originally attached. Accordingly it occupies a middle place between ex and ab; ex denoting departure or removal from or out of the interior of an object, ab, departure or removal from the surface of an object. Hence verbs compounded with de are constructed with ex and ab as well as with de; and verbs compounded with ex and ab are constructed with de, as well as with ex and ab. Etymologically de is connected with διά: and dis- (dir) and di-, used only in composition, are also of the same origin, the s being added as in abs, obs, subs, etc. [v. ab]: down from, from, away from, out of, etc.

A. Of space: I. With motion, denoting departure: from, away from: (quod Arioviscus) de altera parte agri Sequanos decedere juberet, to withdraw from, Caes.: de vita decedere, Cic.: exire de vita, id. 2. Esp. in a downward direction: down from: decido de lecto praeceps, Pl.: de muro se dejicere, Caes. 3. Fig.: to denote the quarter from which an action proceeds: haec agebantur in conventu, palam de sella ac de loco superiore, Cic.: de mausoleo exaudita vox est, Suet. II. Without motion, to denote mere direction downwards: from, down from: deque viri collo dulce pependit onus, Ov.: dumosa pendere procul de rupe videbo (capros), Virg. III. To denote any fixed spot, and hence abode, origin, the idea of belonging to, etc.: of, at, in, from: caupo de via Latina, Cic.: aliquis de ponte, i. e. a beggar, Juv.: Libyca de rupe leones, Ov.

B. Of time: the point of departure: after (very rare): velim scire hodiene statim de auctione aut quo die venias, Cic. Hence diem de die, from day to day: quum is diem de die differret, Liv. II. In the phrases de nocte, de vigilia, etc., to denote the period during or in the course of which the action is done: hence it is less definite than the simple abl. which designates the precise time: in comitium Milo de nocte venit, in the night, Cic.: ut jugulent homines, surgunt de nocte latrones, Hor. Caesar mittit complures equitum turmas eo de media nocte, about midnight, Caes.: Caesar de tertia vigilia e castris profectus, in the course of the third watch, id. In like manner, de die, de luce: de die potare, by day, in the daytime, Pl. Less freq., de mense: navigare de mense Decembri, in December, Cic.

C. In gen. I. Of persons and things, with words denoting the whole collection, or body, from which a part is taken: (esp. with numerals): from among, out of, from, of: hominem certum misi de comitibus meis, Cic.: pauci de nostris cadunt, Caes. Hence, with abl. instead of the genitive case: ne expers partis esset de nostris bonis, Ter.: cetera de genere hoc, Lucr. Hence 2. esp. to denote property, de meo, tuo, etc.: obsonat, potat, olet unguenta de meo, Ter.: de suo, Cic. And fig.: ad tua praecepta de meo nihil his novum apposivi, Pl. II. To designate the material, etc. of which anything is made: of, out of: de eodem oleo et opera exaravi nescio quid ad te, Cic.: nivea factum de marmore signum, Ov. Hence it sometimes implies transformation: de templo carcerem fieri, Cic. III. To indicate the person from whom anything is taken, bought, heard, inquired, etc.: de aliquo quaerere, id.: ut sibi liceret discere id de me, Ter.

D. Of mental operations, moral feelings, etc. I. To indicate the subject of thought, etc. (the most common meaning): about, concerning, with respect to: de numero dierum fidem servare, Caes.: de Dionysio sum admiratus, Cic. II. To denote the cause or reason: for, on account of, because of: de quo nomine ad arbitrum adiisti, de eo ad judicium venisti, id.: qua de causa magno dolore adficiebantur, Caes.: de labore pectus tundit, with pain, Pl. Hence, 2. To designate that in conformity with which any thing is done: according to, after: de suorum prophiquorum sententia atque auctoritate fecisse dicatur, Cic.: de more vetusto, Virg.

E. with adjectives to form adverbial expressions. 1. De integro, afresh: ratio de integro ineunda est mihi, Ter. 2. De improviso, unexpectedly: Caes.: Cic. 3. De transverso, unexpectedly: ecce autem de transverso L. Caesar ut veniam ad se rogat, id.

F. In composition, the e becomes short before a vowel or h, as in dēhisco, dēinde, and coalesces with it in the poets; cf. dehinc, deinceps; sometimes even contraction takes place, as in debeo, dego, from dehabeo, de-ago.

II. Signif.: 1. down, away, off: defero, deduco, defluo. 2. it denotes deficiency, or reverses the meaning of the root.=un-, mis-, dis-: decorico, deficio (un-make), dedamno, to acquit; dedecet, it disgraces. 3. ceasing, preventing: dedoleo, degrandinat. 4. away, out: deblatero, declamo. 5. up, in pieces, etc.: desurgo, defrico (use up), delacero. 6. over, overmuch, much: deauro, defleo, decanto, dealbo, delaboro, deamo. III. De is often put between an adj. or pron. and its substantive: of this, the foregoing examples furnish instances. It is also frequently put after a simple relative.

E.

E, indecl. n. or (subaud. litera) e, f. the fifth letter of the Latin alphabet, the second of the vowel series, representing both the ε and the η of the Greeks. The short e is the least emphatic of the Latin vowels except ĭ.

I. e is substituted for a: 1. in compounds of roots which contain a long by position: e. g.: scando, descendo. It sometimes, but rarely, takes the place of ă: e. g.: grădĭor, progrĕdĭor. In some cases double forms exist, the one with the substituted, the other with the original vowel: e. g.: from spargo, we have both conspergo, and conspargo. 2. in the reduplication of roots with ă: e. g.: căno, cĕ-cĭdi; tango (root tăg-) tĕ-tĭgi. 3. in the perfect of some verbs which have ă in the imperfect: e. g.: jăcio, jēci; făcio, fēci. This may perhaps have arisen from the contraction of reduplicated perfects, je-jici, fe-fici. II. e is changed into i: 1. in a few compound verbs: e. g.: spĕcio, conspicio; prĕmo, imprimo: but generally e in root-verbs remains unchanged. 2. in the inflections of substantives: e. g.: nomĕn, nominis; equĕs, equĭtis. III. e takes the place of i: 1. in the neuter forms of adjectives in is: e. g.: facilis, facile; similis, simile. 2. in the nom. and acc. sing. of a class of neut. substantives: e. g.: ovĭli, ovile, ovilia.

3. in the nom. forms aedes, canes, etc., for aedis, canis, etc. IV. e in a few instances takes the place of o: e. g.: verto for vorto; vertex for vortex, vester for voster. 2. e in verbal roots is sometimes changed into o in derived substantives: e. g.: tĕgo, tŏga; pendo, pondus. But this change, which is a regular rule of derivation in Greek, is extremely rare in Latin. V. e is rarely found instead of u: e. g.: anger for angur; from jūro are formed dejĕro, and pejĕro. 2. e is changed into u in the nom. and acc. sing. of a class of neut. substantives: e. g.: opĕs, opŭs, opĕris.

VI. ĕ is omitted in the inflections of many nouns which in the nom. sing. end in ĕr: e. g.: matĕr, matrem; magistĕr, magistri; pulcĕr, pulcra, pulcrum.

VII. changes of E in the Romance languages. 1. long e generally remains unchanged, but is sometimes changed (i) into oi in French: cf. Lat. avena, credo, with Fr. avoine, crois: (ii) into i in French: cf. Lat. cera, ecclesia, with Fr. cire, église. 2. short e is generally changed (i) into ie: cf. Lat. fel, gelu, with It. fiele, gielo: Lat. fel, hedera, with Fr. fiel, lierre. (ii) sometimes into i: cf. Lat. deus, ego, meus, with It. dio, io, mio: Lat. decem, nego, with Fr. dix, nier.

ex or ē (the latter form only before consonants, and even there far less frequently than ex. But certain expressions have the same form invariably, as ex parte, ex sententia, ex tempore; and on the other hand, e regione and e republica, used adverbially), prep. with abl. [The original form of this prep. was probably ec, which is found in many compounds, and is identical with the Gr. ἐκ, the form ex corresponding with Gr. ἐξ] out of, from (opp. to in).

A. Of space: in has lautumias ex oppidis deduci imperantur, Cic. 2. In a downward direction: from, down from, off: equestribus proeliis saepe ex equis desiliunt, Caes. 3. In an upward direction: globum terrae eminentem e mari, Cic. 4. To denote the quarter (without motion): on, at: reliquis ex omnibus partibus colles oppidum cingebant, on all the other sides, Caes. ‖ Hence, with a subst. for an adj. denoting origin: from, of: ex Aethiopia est usque haec, Ter. Freq. without a verb: Q. Junius ex Hispania quidam, Caes. ‖ To indicate the place where any thing is done, from, down from: Ariovistus ex equis ut colloquerentur postulavit, id. Hence the adverbial expressions, ex adverso, ex diverso, ex contrario, e regione, ex parte, etc. (v. adversus, etc.). Also, ex itinere, during or on a journey or march (but implying its interruption): Cic.: ex fuga, from or after the flight, Caes.

B. Of time: from and after a given point of time: bonus volo jam ex hoc die esse, from this day forward, Pl.: ex quo (sc. tempore) obses Romae fuit, Liv. 2. immediately after, directly after, after: Cotta ex consulatu est profectus in Galliam, Cic. So the phrase, aliud ex alio, one thing after another: me quotidie aliud ex alio impedit, id. So, diem ex die exspectabam, one day after another, from day to day, id. ‖ Less freq. in specifying a future date: from, after: hunc judicem ex Kal. Jan. non habemus, id.

C. Of other relations: I. With verbs which denote taking, receiving (both physically and mentally, as perceiving, learning, hoping, etc.): from, out of, of: solem e mundo tollere videntur, qui amicitiam e vita tollunt, id.: intellexi ex tuis litteris te ex Turannio audisse, id.: ex captivis comperit, Caes. ‖ With words denoting the whole from which something is taken. Esp. with numerals: out of, of: ex omnibus seculis vix tria aut quatuor nominantur paria amicorum, Cic.: ex deditициis Belgis complures, Caes.: ex tribus istis modis rerum publicarum velim scire quod optimum judices, Cic. 2. Sometimes for the genitive: has (turres) altitudo pupium ex barbaris navibus superabat, Caes. ‖ To denote the material of which anything is made: of: statua ex aere facta, Cic.: monilia e gemmis, Suet. ‖ To indicate the cause or origin: from, through, by, by reason of, on account of: quum esset ex aere alieno commota civitas, Cic.: in spem victoriae adductus ex opportunitate loci, Sall.: ex Transalpinis gentibus triumphare, Cic. 2. Esp. to indicate that from which anything derives its name: from, after, on account of: cui postea Africano cognomen ex virtute fuit, Sall.

V. To indicate transition: from, out of: dii ex hominibus facti, Cic.: nihil est tam miserabile quam ex beato miser, id. ‖ VI. Ex (e) re, ex usu, or ex injuria, etc., to any one's advantage or injury: aliquid facere bene et e re publica, for the good of the state, id.: eam rem non minus ex usu terrae Galliae, quam populi Rom. accidisse, Caes.: ex nullius injuria, Liv. ‖ VII. To denote conformity: according to, after, in conformity with: ex litteris Caesaris supplicatio decreta est, Caes.: ex collegii sententia, Liv.: ex senatus consulto, Cic.: ex foedere, Liv. ‖ VIII. In adverbial expressions: e. g. ex aequo, ex commodo, ex diverso, ex facili, ex affluenti, ex continenti, ex confesso, ex improviso, ex inopinato, e regione, etc.: v. these words. Ex placed after its noun: tergis ex omnia surgunt, Lucr.

D. In composition ex is usually employed only before vowels and the consonants h, c, p, q, s, t; before f, the prefix becomes ef; and before the other consonants the form e is used. A few exceptions to these rules are found: e. g. epoto and epotus as well as expotus; escendo as well as exscensio; the forms exfero, ecfari, ecfodio, are not uncommon in good MSS., and from them (not from exfero, etc.) the assimilated form proceeds. Moreover, in the compounds of roots beginning with s, the s is often elided: e. g. excidium for exscidium (from exscindo), and sometimes double forms of such compounds exist: e. g. exul, exsul, etc.

2. Signification: a. Primarily and most freq. out or forth: exeo; and in an upward direction, emineo. Hence also, fig. to imply change, the result being indicated by the root, e. g. effeminare, to change a man's disposition into that of a woman: in other cases ex is privative and equivalent to the English without, or the suffix less: e. g. effrenare, elinguis. b. termination, conclusion: e. g. elugeo: so in the neuter verbs which in composition (esp. after the Aug. per.) become active: e. g. egredior, excedo. Sometimes ex is equivalent to utterly, entirely: e. g. evincere: and hence it comes to have an intensitive force equivalent to the superlative suffix: e. g. edurus.

F.

F, f, the sixth letter of the Latin alphabet, occupies the same place as the digamma or vau in the Greek alphabet, to which it corresponds in form. F is one of the few aspirated letters in the Latin alphabet, and belongs to the class of labials: hence it corresponds most nearly to the Greek Φ: this is seen from a comparison of such words as fero, fuga, with the Greek φέρω, φυγή. Subsequently, however, the complex symbol ph was introduced into Latin, and then it became the exclusive representative of the Greek φ, until, in the last period of the language, f again frequently took the place of ph, and finally, in Italian, entirely supplanted it. ‖ Interchanges of F. 1. With H, the h in Latin corresponding to f in the Sabine dialect: e. g. fedus, haedus; fasena, harena (arena); fordeum, hordeum; vefo, velo, etc. 2. With X in Greek: e. g. frenum, χαλινός; fel, χολή; funis, σ-χοινος. 3. With Θ in Greek: e. g. fera, θήρ; ferveo, febris, θέρω, θερμός, etc. 4. With B: e. g. af for ab; sifilare for sibilare; rufus, ruber; fremo, βρέμω; fascino, βασκαίνω. Also with B in the Teutonic languages: e. g. Lat. frater, ferre, frango; Eng. brother, bear, break. 5. In the composition of roots beginning with f the final consonants of the prefixes are assimilated to it: e. g. offero, affero, differo, effero, for ob-fero, ad-fero, dis-fero, ex-fero, etc. ‖ Changes of F in the Romance languages: 1. into h (cf. II. 1.). This occurs chiefly in Spanish, in which it is very common: e. g. Lat. ferrum, filius; Span. hierro, hijo; Lat. fabulari, facere; Span. hablar (Fr. hâbler), hacer. 2. into b: e. g. Lat. floccus, It. bioccolo; Lat. forfex, It. forbice.

G.

G, g, indect. n. or litera subaud.) f. ‖. This letter represents the sound of the medial guttural, but was not originally included in the Latin alphabet, its place being supplied by C, which, as stated under that letter, had in early times the sound of the Greek γ (for examples vide C.). The pronunciation of C having subsequently undergone a change, a new symbol, slightly differing from it, was introduced about the beginning of the second Punic war.

‖. As an initial, g, in pure Latin words, enters into consonantal combination with l and r only; hence in roots which originally began with gn, the g was rejected in the classical period; e. g. gnascor, gnatus, gnomen, became nascor, natus, nomen; but in the compounds the g reappears, e. g.: cognatus, cognomen. ‖‖. Interchanges of G with other letters. As a guttural, g is most closely connected with the other gutturals, c, k, q, j, and h. 1. For the interchanges of c and g, vide C. 2. With s, g combines to form x; e. g. the stem reg- has N. S. rex; so greg- grex, etc. Similarly in the perfect tenses of verbs, tego, texi; rego, rexi. But sometimes the g is elided: e. g. mulgeo, mulsi. ‖V.
