PREFACE.

THE compiler's original intention was to have put before the public a revised edition of Ayscough's well-known work; but on examination its omissions and erroneous readings proved to be so numerous that it was considered better to begin de novo. The present volume is, therefore, the result of arduous and prolonged labour. It is not a Verbal but a Phrase Concordance; and the compiler believes it to be at once the most comprehensive and the most accurate that has yet been published. He trusts that no phrase of any value, interest, or importance has been omitted; while the key-words have been chosen carefully with the view of rendering reference as easy as possible. Even as a collection of "the beauties of Shakspeare"—of fine passages, images, allusions, sentiments—the present volume, it is hoped, will be acknowledged to possess more than ordinary claims to the reader's attention. A Verbal Concordance is useful only for purposes of reference; but a Phrase Concordance, so copious as that which the compiler now submits, may serve to remind the reader of favourite quotations, of choice and cherished lines, and supply him with a liberal compendium of Shakspearian thought.

Great attention has been paid to the text of every passage cited, with an anxious desire to decide always on the best reading. With this object, the compiler has compared the original issues with the editions by Dyce, the Cambridge editors, Knight, Collier, Howard Staunton, Grant White, Sidney Walker, J. O. Halliwell-Phillips, and others, and with the occasional renderings suggested by contributors to Notes and Queries, The Athenæum, &c.

It is with reverence the compiler places this modest stone on the colossal cairn which the industry and intelligence of editors, commentators, critics, and interpreters has slowly accumulated to the memory of Shakspeare.

2 Explained by Dr. Johnson:—"Do you stand to compare your present state, a state which you have neither right nor power to maintain, with the terms which we offer?"

1 To change complexion.

2 At the birth of Meleager of Calydon it was foretold that he would live as long as the brand on the hearth remained unspent Therefore the brand, for many years, was carefully preserved; but Meleager having killed the famous boar in Calydon, and given its head to Atalanta, his mother Althea, in a burst of wrath, threw it into the fire. It was burned, and Meleager perished. See A. C. Swinburne's poem of "Atalanta in Calydon."

3 Partly because he wished to please his mother, and partly to gratify his pride.

1 "Large belts were worn with the buckle before; but, for wrestling, the buckle was turned behind, to give the adversary a fairer grasp at the girdle. To turn the buckle behind was therefore a challenge."—Holt White. Mr. Halliwell-Phillips offers, however, a better explanation. "The challenge was to fight; to turn the girdle was to put the sword-sheath a little back in order to draw the weapon." This proverbial form of expression lasted as late as the beginning of the eighteenth century; for, in Dean Swift's "Polite Conversation," we read:—Lady Answerall. "Mr. Neverout, if Miss will be angry or nothing, take my counsel, and tie her, turn the buckle of her girdle behind her."

[1] Delighted=delicate, refined. The monks taught that there were two hells, one of fire, the other "passing cold," like ice. Shakespeare's "thrilling region" reminds one, however, of the ninth circle in Dante's Inferno:—

> "Thereupon I turn'd,
> And saw before and underneath my feet
> A lake, whose frozen surface liker seemed
> To glass than water."

Compare with Milton, p. 6, ii., 601:—

> "The bitter change
> Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce,
> From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
> Their soft ethereal warmth."

I that have been love's whip . . . . What I! I love! I rue! I seek a wife! Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue, and groan: Some men must love my lady, and some Joan. Ibid.——This love is as mad as Ajax. Ibid. iv. 3.——I will not love: if I do, hang me: i' faith, I will not. Oh, but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. . . . By heaven, I do love; and it hath taught me to rhyme, and to be melancholy. Ibid.——On a day—alack the day!—Love whose month is ever May, Spied a blossom, passing fair, Playing in the wanton air. Ibid.——Oh, but for my love, day would turn to night! Ibid.——Love, first learnèd in a lady's eyes, Lives not alone immurèd in the brain. Ibid.——Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in taste: For valour, is not Love a Hercules, Still climbing trees in the Hesperides? Subtle as syhynx; as sweet and musical As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair; And when Love speaks, the voice of all the gods Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony. Never durst poet touch a pen to write, Until his ink were tempered with Love's sighs. Ibid.——For revels, dances, masks, and merry hours, Forerun fair Love, strewing her way with flowers. Ibid.——Love doth approach disguised, Armèd in arguments. Ibid. v. 2.——Therefore, ladies, Our love being yours, the error that love makes Is likewise yours. Ibid.——My love to thee is sound, sans crack or flaw. Ibid.——Though the mourning brow of progeny Forbid the smiling courtesy of love. Ibid.——Since love's argument was first on foot, Let not the cloud of sorrow justle it From what it purposed. Ibid.——Love is full of unbefitting strains, All wanton as a child, skipping, and vain, Formed by the eye, and, therefore, like the eye, Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms. Ibid.——The party-coated presence of loose love. Ibid.——Things base and vile, holding no quantity, Love can transpose to form and dignity: Love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind, And therefore is winged Cupid painted blind. Nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste; Wings and no eyes figure unheedy haste; And therefore is love said to be a child, Because in choice he is so oft beguiled. As waggish boys in game themselves forswear, So the boy-love is perjured everywhere. Mid. N. Dr. i. 1.——Your buskined mistress and your warrior love. Ibid. ii. 1.——A certain aim he took, And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow, As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts. Ibid.——A sweet Athenian lady is in love With a disdainful youth. Ibid.——Thy love ne'er alter till thy sweet life end! Ibid. ii. 2.——With sighs of love that cost the fresh blood dear. Ibid. iii. 2.——What though I be not so in grace as you, So hung upon with love, so fortunate, But miserable most, to love unloved? Ibid. iii. 2.——You thief of love! what, have you come by night And stolen my love's heart from him? Ibid.——Verses of feigning love. Ibid. i. 1.——Thou hast given her rhymes, And interchanged love-tokens with my child. Ibid.——You have her father's love, Demetrius; Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him. Ibid.——Ay me! for aught that I could ever read, Could ever hear by tale or history, The course of true love never did run smooth. Ibid.——O hell! to choose love by another's eye! Ibid.——Playing on pipes of corn and versing love. Ibid. ii. 1.——She shall pursue it with the soul of love. Ibid.——What thou seest when thou dost wake, Do it for thy true-love take, Love and languish for his sake. Ibid. ii. 2.——Takes the meaning in love's conference. Ibid. ii. 2.——Love's stories written in Love's richest book. Ibid——Speak, of all love's! Ibid.——Reason and love keep little company together now-a days. Ibid. iii. 1.——Oh, why rebuke you him that loves you so? Ibid. iii. 2.——With sighs of love, that cost the fresh blood dear. Ibid.——If e'er I loved her, all that love is gone. Ibid.——Will you rent our ancient love asunder, To join with men in scorning your poor friend? Ibid.——Wherefore doth Lysander Deny your love, so rich within his soul? Ibid.——Miserable most, to love unloved! Ibid.——I with the morning's love have oft made sport. Ibid——Joy and fresh days of love Accompany your hearts. Ibid. v. 1.——Let it not enter in your mind of love. Mer. of Ven. ii. 8.——To courtship and such fair ostents of love. Ibid.——Yet I have not seen So likely an ambassador of love. Ibid. ii. 9.——There's something tells me but it is not love, I would not lose you. Ibid. iii. 2.——If you do love me you will find me out. Ibid——Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love. Ibid. iii. 4.——Whose loves are dearer than the natural bond of sisters. As You Like It, i. 2.——If thou remember'est not the slightest folly That ever love did make thee run into, Thou hast not loved, Or if thou hast not sat as I do now, Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress' praise, Thou hast not loved: Or, if thou hast not broke from company Abruptly, as my passion now makes me, Thou hast not loved. Ibid. ii. 4.——We that are true lovers run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly. Ibid.——The worst fault you have is to be in love—'Tis a fault I would not change for your best virtue. Ibid. iii. 2.——He seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Ibid.——I am he that is so love shaked. Ibid.——He taught me how to know a man in love. Ibid.——But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak. Ibid.——Neither rhyme nor reason can express how much. Ibid.——Love is merely a madness: and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark-house and a whip, as madmen do. Ibid.——You are rather point-device in your accoutrements, as loving yourself, than seeming the lover of any other. Ibid.——I drive my suitor from his mad humour of love to a loving humour of madness. Ibid.——But for his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a worm-eaten nut. Ibid. iii. 4.——The sight of lovers feedeth those in love. Ibid.——The wounds invisible That love's keen arrows make. Ibid. iii. 5.——Down on your knees, And thank heaven, fasting, for a good man's love,

Ibid.——Who ever loved that loved not at first sight. Ibid.——Think not I love him, though I ask for him; 'Tis but a peevish boy. Ibid.——Break an hour's promise in love. Ibid. iv. 1.——There was not any man died in his own person, videlicet, in a love cause. Ibid.——You have simply misused me, sir, in your love prate. Ibid.——Her love is not the hare that I do hunt. Ibid. iv. 3.——I see, love hath made thee a tame snake. Ibid. iv. 3.——Phe.: Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love. Sil.: It is to be all made of sighs and tears . . . . It is to be all made of faith and service; . . . It is to be made of fantasy, All made of passion, and all made of wishes; All adoration, duty, and obedience, All humbleness, all patience, and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance. Ibid. v. 2.——Is it possible, That love should of a sudden take such hold? T. of Shr. i. 1.——I found the effect of love in idleness. Ibid.——O, despiteful love! Ibid. iv. 2.——Love all, trust a few, do wrong to none. All's Well, i. 1.——The ambition in my love thus plagues itself. Ibid.——It is the show and seal of nature's truth, Where love's strong passion is imprest in youth. Ibid. i. 3.——I know I love in vain, strive against hope; Yet, in this captious and intenible sieve I still pour in the waters of my love, And lack not to lose still: thus, Indian-like, Religious in mine error, I adore The sun, that looks upon his worshipper, But knows of him no more. Ibid.——Who shuns thy love, shuns all his love in me. Ibid. ii. 3.——The great prerogative and rite of love, Which as your due, time claims, he does acknowledge, But puts it off by a compelled restraint. Ibid. ii. 4.——I begin to love, As an old man loves money, with no stomach. Ibid. iii. 2.——In your fine frame hath love no quality. Ibid. iv. 2.——But I love thee by love's own sweet constraint. Ibid.——But love that comes too late, Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried, To the great sender turns a sour offence. Ibid. v. 3.——Our own love, waking, cries to see what's done, While shameful hate sleeps out the afternoon. Ibid.——If music be the food of love, play on . . . O spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou! 2 John of dreams, dreamy John. In this sense "John-a-dreams" has been used as the title of a clever novelette of Dr Julian Sturgis.

3 Unready (or perhaps lethargic) in my cause.

4 The folio reads "Judean," but that Indian is correct may be inferred from the following passages—

From Habington's Castara—

> "So the unskilful Indian those bright gems,
> Which might add majesty to diadems,
> 'Mong the waves scatters."

From Dryden's Legend of Matilda—

> "The wretched Indian spurns the golden ore."

1 George Peele, in his "Edward I," says: "He can ring rhyme with reason, and rhyme without reason, and without reason or rhyme."

Some lines attributed to Spenser, but probably written by Charles Churchyard, run thus:—

"You bid your treasurer once a time
To give me reason for my rhyme;
But from that time and [from] that reason,
I have had nor rhyme nor reason."

2 This is supposed to be "henbane," the use of which was considered to "lend madness." Shakespeare's bold application of the effect to the cause reminds us of a similar instance in Keat's Isabella:—

"So the two brothers and their murdered man
Rode on towards Florence."

1 For "Run-away" has been suggested "Rumour," "Luna's eye," "rude day," etc.; but the obvious allusion, as Mr. Halpin points out, is to Cupid, a necessary actor in all hymeneal scenes. This very name of "Run-away" is applied to Cupid by Thomas Heywood, in his masque of "Love's Mistress." See too, Mac Fairni's "Hue and Cry:"—

"Beauties, have you seen this toy
Called love—a little boy
Almost naked, wanton, kind,
And now, and now as kind—
If he be amongst ye, say:
He is Venus' 'Run-away.'"

Shakespeare, in his Cymbeline, ii 4. places "two winking Cupids." The whole passage (in Juliet's soliloquy) is thus paraphrased by Mr. Halpin:—"Secrecy is essential to our safety. Let the day, therefore, depart, and let night spread her curtain around, and let not Cupid discharge his ministry of lighting up the bride-chamber. If (as painted by some) he have eyes, let them wink—i.e., be darkened, for we have need of darkness, that the interview, being invisible, may be untalked of; and we have no need of light, because lovers can see by their own beauties. If, however, (as depicted by others), he be blind, it is all as it should be: his blindness agrees with that darkness, for the sake of which the presence of night is so desirable."—Shakespeare's Secret Papers, ii. 26, 27.
